FOOTBALL SURPRISES IN YESTERDAY'S GAMES

WESLEYAN HOLDS COLUMBIA

Splendid Defense by Syracuse Only Gives Yale a Small Score—Results of Other Games.

The first real test of the football elevens came yesterday, and in several instances it displayed the strength and weaknesses of the teams, although in no case was there a victory of one of the lesser colleges over the big fellows. The nearest approach to this was the holding of Columbia by Wesleyan to no score. In a measure such a result was expected, and some of the experts believe that only the splendid brace with which Coach Morley had instilled the men saved them from defeat.

Cornell showed improvement over the past week and overcame Bucknell, of whom she was somewhat fearful, by a one-sided score of 24 to 0. Both of the matches played by Pennsylvania reveal some unexpected qualities on the part of important teams. Pennsylvania was only able to win over Swarthmore by 11 to 4, and this indicates that the Pennsylvania line was sorely put to it in order to save themselves. In the other game the Indians had their fill of hard playing against the Pennsylvania State College to the score of 11 to 0, and this with a record of no downs against them so far. West Point defeated Colgate, but the latter scored once behind the army line. In this respect the Navy team did better, for they rolled up a topping score against the Virginia Military Institute. The strength of Syracuse was shown to be of no mean calibre this season, for the men from the Methodist University held Yale down to a score of 16, despite the efforts of the latter to do better. The results of the day's play brings the fact prominently into view that some of the smaller colleges have developed surprisingly strong teams this season and a turn of the tables may be looked for in any of the coming matches. The leading scores follow:

Yale, 16; Syracuse, 0.
Harvard, 22; University of Maine, 0.
Princeton, 34; Georgetown, 0.
Cornell, 24; Bucknell, 0.
Pennsylvania, 11; Swarthmore, 4.
Annapolis, 29; Virginia M. I., 0.
Indians, 11; Pennsylvania State College, 0.
Lehigh, 6; New York University, 2.

Wesleyan and Columbia Play Each Other to a Standstill in Hard Game.

Columbia and Wesleyan played a non-scoring game at American League Park yesterday afternoon. The men from Morningside Heights played faster than in any of their previous matches this season, but the heavy Wesleyan team, though unable to tally itself, kept them from the goal line. Hodgkinson and Armstrong did good work at ground gaining, but the Columbia men were unable to gain consistently, and Wesleyan several times took the ball from them on downs.

The star of the Middletown team was its fast and plucky little quarter back, Van Surdam. He made a run around right end in the first half for 35 yards, carrying the ball to within 15 yards of the Columbia goal, and worried the local men constantly. When pressed Wesleyan punted, Bailey doing the kicking and doing it well. The ineffectual punts of Armstrong lost Columbia more than they made.

It was a splendid day for football, and a crowd of fully 5,000 assembled upon the stands to see the first real test that Columbia faced. Winning the toss and Wesleyan elected to defend the southern goal, Armstrong kicked off, and on the fumble by Wesleyan he got the ball. Then began a series of plunges through the heavy line. Hodgkinson and Helmrich alternately rushed the ball until it was within 20 yards of Wesleyan's goal. Then the Black and Red line held firm, and got the ball on downs. Bailey punted 45 yards down the field, and a touch-down was averted.

Both teams worked hard in midfield for a while, until Van Surdam got the ball, end, dodging around Columbia's right end, made a run of 35 yards. This brought the leather within 15 yards of Columbia's goal. Then the Blue and White held. A fortunate blocked kick sent the ball rolling into Wesleyan territory. Just at the end of the half Van Surdam made a run of 15 yards back into Columbia's field, but Columbia gained the ball and punted as the whistle sounded.

At the start of the second half Columbia began to tear up the Wesleyan line in a way that threatened a touch-down. Several times the ball went close to the Wesleyan goal, but Wesleyan held and punted out of danger each time. It was then that a riot occurred that brought the police into the game. The ball see-sawed about the centre of the field after this, but neither side could score. Line-up:

YALE'S FORMIDABLE ATTACK.

Breaks Syracuse's Line for Good Gains, and Wins 16 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 7.—Yale defeated Syracuse to-day, 16 to 0, in a fast, well-played game, in which the visitors' stiff defense was overcome by remarkably strong play by Yale's back field. On attack Syracuse was weak, making a first down only twice and at no time threatening Yale's territory.

Yale made one touch-down in the first half and two in the second. The first was made only when Forbes, Yale's left tackle, fell on the ball on Syracuse's ten-yard line after Powell had muffed Veeder's punt. Forbes, by the way, was noticeable in every play, especially in getting down the field under punts. Jones of Exeter also made a hit by his daring tackles.

There was plenty of brilliant individual playing. Flanders and Erwin were strong on offense, while Jones, at quarter, got in a sensational forty-yard run. Veeder, Morse, and Stevenson made short but steady gains. For the visitors Harwood, Tucker, Waugh, and Stimson distinguished themselves. Line-up:

HARVARD PLAYS STRONG GAME

New Men Do Especially Well in the Contest Against Maine.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 7.—Harvard put up the best exhibition of the year to-day and defeated Maine easily, 22 to 0. Although facing the heaviest team met this year, the Crimson backs gained steadily straight through the line. Carr, at full back, proved a wonder, and Montgomery, who took Brill's place at left tackle, played a splendid game. Besides opening the line effectively he blocked a kick, making possible Harvard's third score. Foster and Carr got the first scores on rushes outside of tackle. In the short second half Harvard scored but once. Kersberg, a new man at right guard, did well, while Burnham's and Hall's tackling and Leonard's brilliant 22-yard run on a fake punt were features. The line-up:

PRINCETON, 34; GEORGETOWN, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 7.—Princeton defeated Georgetown to-day by the score of 34 to 0. The visitors proved to be unexpectedly weak, while the Tigers delighted their supporters with the offensive strength which they displayed all through the game. McCormick played full back after an absence of more than a week and put up a magnificent game. His line plunging in the first half was the feature of the game and was directly responsible for the Tigers' first touch-down. Bard at right half back and Daub at left half also did splendid work in advancing the ball and made a strong second line of defense. Bard's punting was not up to his usual standard.

The general team work of the men in to-day's contest was a vast improvement over that in the last game. The interference was quick and more compactly formed, the runner was afforded better protection, and the old push and pull game was again in evidence. Capt. Cooney was the life of every play. Bocock and Cockerill played the best game for Georgetown. Line-up:

Princeton, 34. Position. Georgetown, 0.

CORNELL, 24; BUCKNELL, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, Oct. 7.—Bucknell was decisively defeated by Cornell to-day by the score of 24 to 0. The nearest the visitors approached the Ithacans' line was fifteen yards in the first half.

Fumbles marked Cornell's playing throughout the first period of play. Time after time she was within striking distance of Bucknell's goal, but a fumble always lost her the chance to score. Though the ball thus came often into Bucknell's hands, she was unable to advance it against Cornell's heavy new line.

In the second half the Cornell eleven found itself, and a touch-down resulted every five minutes. Walders, the freshman, got away soon after the kick-off, and ran thirty-five yards for the first score. Gibson, who had taken Martinez's place, figured prominently in the next touch-down, with several long runs behind good interference, though Halliday carried the ball over.

Halliday scored the third by steady line plunging through Thompson and O'Rourke, the two giant freshmen guards, while the last came after a spectacular eighty-yard run by Earls, who had relieved Walders. Halliday kicked all of Cornell's goals. Line-up:

Cornell, 24. Position. Bucknell, 0.

PENN., 11; SWARTHMORE, 4.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 7.—The Pennsylvania football eleven defeated Swarthmore to-day by the score of 11 to 4. In the first half neither eleven scored, but in the second half Pennsylvania scored two touch-downs and Crowell kicked a pretty field goal for Swarthmore a few minutes before time was called. Both elevens were frequently penalized for off-side and holding, and the fumbling by the local team was more pronounced than in any previous game this season. The line-up:

Pennsylvania, 11. Position. Swarthmore, 4.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 7.—West Point showed her strength to-day by defeating Colgate by a score of 18 to 6. In the first half the Cadets made ground at will through Colgate's line, sending Weeks, Christy, and Torney in for good short gains. Colgate got the ball only once or twice, but each time rounded the ends for long runs. West Point scored three times while holding their opponents safe. Colgate held the ball most of the time in the second half and made steady gains around the ends and through the line, resulting in one touch-down.

The game began with a kick-off by Colgate, and after several rushes West Point punted. Colgate fumbled and Ellis got the ball. West Point started a series of heavy line plunges with Weeks and Christy back, and Weeks finally carried the ball over for a touch-down. The rest of the half was spent in similar line plunges, by which Torney and then Beavers made touch-downs.

In the second half West Point made many substitutions, and Colgate carried the ball at will. Castleman and Porter rounded the ends for long gains until Castleman carried it sixteen yards for a touch-down.

Torney played his first game and was a tower of strength. Garey did well. Castleman was the bright particular star for Colgate, well seconded by Porter. West Point men suffered several minor injuries. Both teams were weak in defense, but strong on offense. Line-up:

Army, 18. Position. Colgate, 6.

INDIANS, 11; PENN STATE, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Oct. 7.—The Carlisle Indians shut out Pennsylvania State College here to-day and won, 11 to 0, in a game full of sensational play. The State College men outweighed the Indians twelve pounds per man.

For the most part of both halves the play was in midfield. The redskins got their first touch-down in twelve minutes. Dillon failed to kick a goal. This was the only score of the half. In the second half Capt. Bowen added a tally and Dillon kicked the goal.

Mount Pleasant's kicking and quarter back play were features for Carlisle, while Bowen, Albanez, Archiquette, and Jude did well. For the State Gotwals and McWilliams broke the Indian line well, while Moorehead's work at quarter was excellent. Line-up:

Carlisle, 11. Position. State, 0.

LEHIGH, 11; N. Y. UNIVERSITY, 2.

New York University held Lehigh to a score of 11 to 2 in the game on Ohio Field yesterday. The Bethlehem team fumbled atrociously at the start of play and twice lost the ball to New York after gaining it on hard-fought downs. To top off her poor play Lehigh kicked the ball over her own goal line, where Bachman fell on it for a safety, giving New York the first score. The half ended without the visitors scoring.

In the second half, however, the Lehigh team got her offense working in better shape, and, holding the ball, drove it twice over New York's goal line by resorting to guards back. Herman kicked only one goal, however. Line-up:

NEW FOOTBALL STARS FOR COLLEGE ELEVENS

Men Who Will Shine in Contests This Year.

MATERIAL OF GOOD PROMISE

Captains of the Big Teams All Rank High Individually—Cornell's Good Prospects.

At the beginning of each football season, with the retirement of the Bloomers and the Hogans, the Piekarksis and the Tiptons, the Hestons and the Smiths, there is an annual wail from various colleges of the absence of heavy men, the lack of able players, and the general desolence of the gridiron outlook. Each season notwithstanding adds new candidates to the lists of stars, and many of the new outshine in brilliancy and magnitude the favorites of the past. A few names like Hinkey's and Heffelfinger's, Waters's and Woodruff's, Brooke's and Butterworth's, De Witt's and Daly's, Hare's and Hickok's, King's and Kelly's, Osgood's, and others remain emblazoned in the hall of fame for critics to conjure with, but the majority pass out of mind to be replaced by present heroes whose prowess and power are believed by present-day enthusiasts at least to rank as high as the highest in the temple of tradition.

This year will develop as have other years a striking list. Already the personnel of the various teams is being scanned for indications of latent ability which the future games will bring into exceptional prominence, and the outlook to the hero worshipper is by no means discouraging.

At Yale, where one naturally looks first because of her habitual pre-eminence, there are several candidates for the highest rank. Shevlin of course must lead, for his skill has been proved in three years of play. He should be easily the star of the Yale eleven. Tripp at guard and Forbes at tackle will shine, and of the back field candidates any one of five may prove a luminary of the first water. There are Hoyt and Veeder, Morse and Flynn and Stevenson, all likely to make history if opportunity comes their way. The freshman Jones from Exeter will make his way into prominence before his college career ends, though this season may not witness it, and Boggs of Lawrenceville and Paige of Tacoma are quite likely to prove future Hogans.

At Harvard little Starr at quarter back should prove the stellar player, because of his extreme aggressiveness and his ability to infuse spirit into a team. His individual merit is not as great as Hurley's. Hanley at full back has natural qualifications that suggest great possibilities in him. There is none of the old line men, not even Brill, whose ability is sufficient to warrant the expectation that he will be unduly prominent, but Pierce from last year's ineligible squad ought to be. Of the new men O'Brien, from Roxbury, and McLeod from Boston Tech. are expected to prove the highest class men.

At Princeton, Capt. Cooney should again be the main dependence of the Tiger and should rank with the highest. The other line men, although capable, are not expected to develop into world beaters. Tenney, at quarter back, ought to prove of high grade, but in the back field Simons gives evidence of the greatest possibilities. Whatever success Princeton attains will not be individual, however. Nassau must develop team work to make a showing, and individual play is going to be discounted.

Stevenson, the brilliant Quaker quarter back, should again rank first at Pennsylvania. His wonderful open-field running would easily single him out in any game. Marshall Reynolds's kicking is as notable in its way, while Lamson, at tackle, ought to stand out, with his running ability and his defensive skill. Weede is another man who at end might have played a very prominent part in the season had he not broken his leg in the Gettysburg game, while there are several new men who promise well. There are Horr, the Colgate guard; Bankhart, the Exeter centre, and Draper, the Springfield tackle, all of whom are thought to have stellar possibilities, while Robinson, the freshman guard, and Boeckman, the old Minnesota back, ought to be prominent.

At Cornell there is probably more promising material than at any other college. The old men, while they are strong players, are not, strictly speaking, of all-America calibre, though Cook, Costello, Rice, and Halliday might easily class so with a very slight advancement. The new men who will be watched with particular interest as having all the earmarks of future greats are Thompson, the Andover guard, who has already attracted more attention than any freshman in recent years, on account of his desertion of Yale; Schildmiller, the end, and Kirberger, the Mercersburg half, are about the best of the lot.

Strictly speaking, at Columbia there are no old men who class yearly up to the all-America standard. Nor is there any likelihood that any of the new men will attain that eminence. The best that can be said of Columbia, this year is that it has a lot of material of moderate ability that may, with the development of team play, win success through a well-balanced, systematic play, but even the enthusiasts are not very hopeful of that. The absence of Metzenthin is likely to be severely felt.

Among the smaller colleges there always loom up a few men who by contrast with the rest of the team show to particular advantage. Many of these, on this account, are ranked in the popular mind higher than they really deserve to be. A few, like Gillespie and Torney at West Point, Mount Pleasant and Sheldon of the Indians, Glaze at Dartmouth, and Crowell at Swarthmore, would rank high in any company. It is these men who will shine in most of the games played on the gridiron this Fall, although not until the last game can the roll of honor be held to be complete, for a new luminary is liable to arise in this greatest of all American games to outshine even the brightest.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

The Automobile Club of America is making arrangements to serve breakfast on the course to its members on the morning of the Vanderbilt Cup race next Saturday. A large tent will be erected back of the grand stand near Mineola, and breakfast will be served from 4 to 8 o'clock in the morning. A separate tent will be provided for ladies. The House Committee of the club is making the necessary arrangements, and the plan has been heartily commended by the club members.

All of the boxes and the grand stand seats for the Vanderbilt Cup race next Saturday have been taken and nearly all of the parking spaces have also been engaged. The interest in the event is far greater than was the case last year, for several hundred additional seats have been provided and they have been sold for $5 each. Among the boxholders will be W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Alexander C. Young, Clarence Gray Dinsmore, Robert Lee Morrell, Col. Albert A. Pope, Benjamin Stern, Robert Graves, W. J. P. Moore, E. R. Thomas, Leon Rubay, Emil Grossman, J. K. Ellsworth, Mrs. Clarence Mackay, James L. Breese, Arthur G. Hoffman, Charles J. Glidden, W. C. Temple, H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy, R. Lincoln Lippitt, A. D. Proctor Smith, O. H. P. Belmont, W. Gould Brokaw, J. Harding Horace, Foxhall P. Keene, E. J. Connill, Albert C. Bostwick, H. A. Lozier, Jr., the Brook Club, John C. King, Jules S. Bache, Col. E. H. P. Greene, George Heath, A. L. Riker, A. R. Pardington, and J. Insley Blair.

The New York Motor Club has moved into new quarters at the Cumberland, Broadway and Fifty-fourth Street, and within a short time the club will give a house warming. The old clubrooms at Bretton Hall, Eighty-sixth Street and Broadway, were not convenient as the regular meeting place during the day for the members and the tradesmen that belong to the organization. The new location is in the centre for the automobile Broadway trade district and convenient for all.

The second race for the international trophy presented for competition by Sir Thomas R. Dewar, will be held over the Coney Island Boulevard Oct. 18, between the hours of 8 and 10 A. M.

The Park Commissioner of Brooklyn Borough has granted the permit for the use of the boulevard for the race. A mile course will be laid out on the boulevard, and the race will be run in heats if there are more than four entries. The trophy is now held by Louis Ross of Newtonville, Mass., who will not defend it owing to the fact that has disposed of his racing machine which won the cup.

Many manufacturers and individuals are having racing cars built for the Ormond-Daytona races Jan. 22 to 27. S. F. Edge of London proposes to send over one or two fast cars, as he did last year, with Arthur MacDonald, who will drive, as he did last year.

The first automobile show in this country was held in Madison Square Garden, in November, 1900, under the auspices of the Automobile Club of America. In 1901 the second show was held under the auspices of a committee named by the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers, on which the Madison Square Garden Company and the Automobile Club of America had each a representative. The succeeding shows of 1903, 1904, and 1905 were held under the same auspices. For the first time the coming show will be divided into departments. On the main floor will be pleasure vehicles of gasoline and steam motive power. Electric vehicles will be in the exhibition hall. Commercial vehicles will be in the basement. For tires, parts, and accessories the concert hall and platforms above the floor will be used.

AUTOISTS ALL AFRAID OF BAD LUCK IN 13

Keene Gets No. 5 in Redraw, but Jenatzy Holds First Place.

MRS. DINGLEY IN RACING CAR

Rides with Her Husband in Early Morning Practice—George Heath Out for First Time.

Foxhall P. Keene and Robert Graves each won a victory yesterday in the redraw for positions of the German automobile team in the Vanderbilt Cup race. The draw took place at the Garden City Hotel. Luck again gave Mr. Graves the choice of first position, and his driver, Jenatzy, will be the first of the racers to start. Foxhall Keene, who originally was burdened with No. 13, drew No. 5. John B. Warden, who formerly had No. 5, drew No. 9, and the unlucky No. 13 fell to the lot of S. B. Stevens. The number, however, will not be used. The storm of protest that has been aroused over the use of that number caused Chairman Robert Lee Morrell of the Racing Board to announce that the committee had determined upon another process of elimination, and instead of No. 13 being painted on the car the designation "X" will be used. Consequently "X" will not mean 10, but it will demonstrate to the public the ease with which superstitious automobile fears may be quelled, although the car which will be driven by Mr. Stevens's chauffeur, Campbell, will start in thirteenth place.

If H. L. Bowden's Mercedes is allowed to start in the race, taking the place of Clarence Dinsmore's car, he will start in seventeenth place, but this question will be determined by the committee to-morrow night. At present there is some doubt as to whether the necessary parts can be obtained for his car.

The members of the German team, Robert Graves, Foxhall Keene, John B. Warden, and S. B. Stevens met at the Garden City Hotel at 11 o'clock in the morning, but it required two hours of uneasy discussion before the members made the second draw. Mr. Graves, from the first, opposed the redraw. He was naturally afraid that Jenatzy would loose his opportunity of starting first in the race. Mr. Keene persisted as strongly for the draw. He was unrepresented at the original draw at the Automobile Club of America, and, while he disclaimed any feeling again No. 13, he claimed that, as a member of the team, his rights should be respected as much as the other members. This view of the case was upheld by Mr. Morrell, and the redraw was ordered if necessary. Efforts to effect a mutual understanding without a draw proved unavailing. It was a trying time for Mr Graves, but a few minutes later he emerged from the committee room, his face wreathed in smiles and bearing in his hand the little piece of white paper with No. 1 marked upon it.

"I'll never oppose a redraw or anything else again," he said. "Luck has hit me twice and I'm willing to take my chances hereafter."

It was afterward ascertained that Mr. Keene made the first draw and got 5 and then Mr. Graves pulled out the coveted 1.

Mr. Warden, who is an amateur, went over the course with his racing car early in the morning, but he admitted that he did not try to make fast speed. Mr. Keene made three rounds at an average of about thirty minutes for the twenty-eight miles. He seemed to have perfect command over his car and it was evident he could have made much faster time.

A rumor was current that Jenatzy covered the route in 24:10, but this could not be substantiated. The best time that seemed to have been caught with care and accuracy was made by Wagner in his 80 horse power Darracq car, which made one round in 26 minutes and another in 26:20. He made three rounds, the other being 30 minutes. In all eleven of the big racing cars were out between 5:30 and 7:30 o'clock. The others were Duray, Walter White with his steamer, Szisz, Dingley, Heath, Sartori, and Campbell. Campbell did 28 minutes, Szisz did 29 minutes, and the others were satisfied with 30 minutes or over.

George Heath, the holder of the Vanderbilt Cup, made his first appearance on the course, but he used his second Panhard racer. The one he will use in the race is in the garage at Mineola. When asked later in the day when he expected to take out the car with which he will defend the cup, Mr. Heath added, nonchalantly:

"I do not know that I will take it out at all."

"That looks like confidence in the car," returned his questioner, at which the tall American, who ranks among the best French drivers, smiled. Mr. Heath said he was well pleased with the course, although he pointed out two or three bad places that might be improved.

"I think the winning car ought to make an average of at least sixty miles an hour for the entire race," replied Mr. Heath when asked what he thought would be the winning speed. Mr. Heath has taken up quarters in Mineola and will remain there until after the race. Mrs. Heath went over the course with him yesterday afternoon in a touring car.

Bert Dingley, who has just returned from the West, surprised the early watchers by going over the course in his big Pope-Toledo, accompanied by his wife. Mrs. Dingley, overjoyed at the success of her husband in winning the elimination race, came on from California to see the result of the Vanderbilt contest, and she is staying at the Pope-Toledo house in Garden City.

NEW WORLD'S RECORD BY PACER DAN PATCH

Black Horse Covers Mile in 1:55¼ at Lexington.

NO WHIP TO URGE HIM ON

Fastest Three Heats Ever Paced in a Race Credited to Locanda and Hazel Patch.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 7.—Dan Patch, king of pacers, to-day clipped three-quarters of a second from his own (the world's) record, 1:56, negotiating the mile in 1:55¼. A crowd of 10,000 persons was already in a high state of enthusiasm over the smashing of the 1905 race record and the world's three-heat record successively, and when Dan Patch's time was hung out excitement approached frenzy. Cheering people threw hats and wraps in the air and swarmed into the track, despite the efforts of policemen, the ovation continuing several minutes.

The great son of Joe Patchen and Zelika appeared for his trial at 4 o'clock. The track was lightning fast. There was no wind, and the weather conditions were ideal. Scott Hudson drove the pacemaker. A strip of cloth between the wheels of the forward sulky to prevent dirt being thrown behind was the only suggestion of a wind shield. H. C. Hersey was behind Dan Patch. The books offered 4 to 5 either way on the result of the effort.

Thera were cheers when 0:29½ was hung out for the first quarter. Patch's nose was almost against Hudson's coat, and the crowd began vainly yelling to Hudson to move up. Hope was stimulated when 0:57½ was posted for the half. Excitement became intense when the three-quarters was passed in 1:26¾, and the spectators began shouting encouragement to the drivers.

Into the stretch the great pacer, still keeping his even, seemingly effortless stride, the runner at his sulky wheel, began to crawl up. Hudson gave a little more rein, but Hersey sat like a statue, not urging his charge with whip or word. Dan Patch made no last supreme effort. He just finished the mile as he had begun it. He had scarcely broken into a sweat when led back to receive the plaudits of the crowd.

M. W. Savage, his owner, had the announcer publicly thank Hudson for his work as pacemaker. He also announced that Dan Patch on Wednesday would be sent against the record of 1:59¼, made by Star Pointer and Audubon Boy without a dust shield.

The three fastest heats ever paced marked the 2:04 event. The average time for the total heats of the day was the fastest on record. In the initial heat of the 2:04 pace, Hazel Patch gave the Lexington track the 1905 race record of 2:02¾. The next heat was won by Laconda in 2:02. He likewise captured the third heat in 2:04¾. The three finishes were pronounced the most heartbreaking seen this year. Nathan Straus, the favorite throughout the pooling, though fields sold at from 60 to 50, to 50 to 30, had to be content with third money. The betting was the heaviest of the meeting. Scott Hudson was in the sulky for the first time this season behind Nervolo.

Every favorite was beaten to-day. In the Wilson Stake, 2:20 pace, Bolivar won in straight heats. Kid Shay took the 2:08 trot from the heavy favorite, Angiola, likewise in straight heats. Harold Brooks was favorite in the 2:14 pace, but Gratt won in straight heats, though the contest was close. Summaries:

DRIVING CLUB'S LAST RACES.

Championships Awarded at Final Matinee at Empire City Track.

The curtain was rung down yesterday on light harness racing for the season at the Empire City trotting track. The weekly programmes of the New York Driving Club have extended over a period of sixteen weeks, during which time nearly 30,000 persons have witnessed 160 races with a total of 400 heats. As many as seventy-five fast horses have taken part in the season's racing, while in one matinee fifty-three entries faced the starter. It has been the most successful season's racing in the history of the club.

Seven cups were offered for competition during the season. Six of these were presented yesterday to the owners of the winning horses by President C. C. Lloyd. The trophy for double teams was not awarded. According to the rules an entry was required to start in six races to qualify. W. C. Floyd-Jones's famous pair, Governor Holt and King Chimes, won five events and established a new double-team record for the track, when King Chimes died and disqualified the entry. Andrew Crawford won two trotting cups with Invader and Belfry Chimes, the former trotting the fastest heat of the season, 2:11¼, and Belfry Chimes finishing first in the greatest number of points scored. T. B. Leahy's Princess Pique captured the cup for winning the most heats in the trotting classes.

J. H. Campbell's Susie G. headed the pacing brigade for the fastest heat of the season—2:11½. C. S. Rice's Star Pugh, who was first in almost every heat before the advent of Susie G., won the heat cup, and Isaac A. Hopper's Black Belle secured the point trophy. Star Pugh led both pacers and trotters in the number of heats won, with sixteen to his credit. Summary:

FAIL TO BREAK RECORDS.

N. Y. A. C. Runners Unable to Better Times of Myers and Burke.

When Mercury-footed athletes assault Father Time, the sympathies of enthusiastic followers of the sport are usually heartily with them, but when they attempt to break records of twenty-four years' standing, particularly such records as those made by Lon Myers, about which entwine sentimental memories of all old-timers, it is a little different proposition. In his attempt to lower Myers's mark at 1,000 yards, made twenty-four years ago to-day, H. V. Valentine, the fleet distance runner of the New York Athletic Club, had only half the support of the attendance gathered at Travers' Island to witness the trials yesterday afternoon and half of them were impersonally glad that he failed. With Harry L. Hillman, the New York Athletic Club sprinter and hurdler, who essayed to break Tommy Burke's mark at 600 yards of nine years' standing, it was a bit different, but Hillmen, too, was unsuccessful. Both men made good attempts, considering the conditions, and deserve credit for their performances.

Valentine's task called for a half-mile in 1:58 or better and strength enough left to finish the remaining 120 yards in 15 seconds in a heart-breaking sprint. It requires at least a man of Charley Kilpatrick's or Tommy Conneff's stripe to worry Myers's speed legacy, and Valentine did not show that capability yesterday. He covered the distance in 2:19 1-5, which on the cold day was quite as good as could be expected of him. So Lon Myers remains enthroned as the greatest runner of any day, and will remain so for a good long time unless Parsons or Lightbody or, maybe, Sullivan, can displace him.

The occasion was the first annual championship inter-club meeting of the Westchester County Association. The performances were all of medium merit, with first honors going probably to R. M. Davis of the Marathon Athletic Club, whose mile run in 4:56, after he had run third in the half, was about the best work of the day. The inter-club honors went to the Marathon Club, which scored 40 points to the New Rochelle Young Men's Christian Association's 20. A regrettable accident occurred following the decision of the pole vault, when Charles Williams of New Rochelle, after winning second place, fell, and it is feared broke his right leg. The physicians who examined him were unable to tell the extent of his injuries on the field. He was removed to his home for further examination.

The summary of events follows:

100-Yard Dash.—Won by J. Randolph, Tarrytown Y. M. C. A.; D. Haight, White Plains Y. M. C. A., second; F. McCloskey, New Rochelle Y. M. C. A., third. Time—0:10 3-5.

LIVELY TENNIS BY WOMEN.

Misses Reynolds and Freeman Win Doubles Cup of Essex Tourney.

Lively lawn tennis on the courts of the Essex County Country Club at Orange, N. J., yesterday resulted in the women's doubles being finished, with the victory going to Miss Reynolds and Miss Freeman, and the mixed doubles being brought up to the final round. Miss Freeman and Mr. Merrill won their brackets in the final of the mixed doubles, and they will meet Mrs. Holden and Mr. Holden in the final for the cup next Saturday.

The cup match of the women's doubles brought out a stirring contest between Miss Dill and her sister, Miss Emma Dill, the daughters of James B. Dill, corporation lawyer, against Miss Reynolds and Miss Freeman. There was a lot of fire and dash about the way that Miss Reynolds and Miss Freeman played from their side of the net. They kept the ball going on the volley all the time, and crossed so accurately that they made short work of the match, defeating the Misses Dill by the score of 6—2 and 6—1.

The mixed doubles resulted in some fine sport, especially the three-set match, in which Mrs. Holden and Mr. Holden won their place in the final by overcoming Miss Grannis and Mr. Grannis after a score of 6—4, 6—8, 6—4. The summary:

Women's Doubles.—Semi-Final Round—Miss Dill and Miss Emma Dill defeated Miss Seabury and Miss Worth, 6—3, 5—7, 6—3. Final Round—Miss Reynolds and Miss Freeman defeated Miss Dill and Miss Emma Dill, 6—2, 6—1.

Mixed Doubles.—First Round—Miss Reynolds and Mr. Reynolds defeated Mrs. Phelps and Mr. Holmes, 6—8, 6—4, 6—2. Second Round—Miss Reynolds and Mr. Reynolds defeated Miss Firth and Mr. Jay Bramhall, 2—6, 6—4, 6—4; Miss Freeman and Mr. Merrill defeated Mrs. John Gallett, Jr., and Mr. John Gallett, Jr., 9—7, 6—2; Mrs. Holden and Mr. Holden defeated Miss Grannis and Mr. Grannis, 6—1, 6—1. Semi-Final Round—Miss Freeman and Mr. Merrill defeated Miss Reynolds and Mr. Reynolds, 6—4, 6—3; Mrs. Holden and Mr. Holden defeated Miss Souther and Mr. Souther, 6—4, 6—8, 6—4.

ST. BELLANE FIRST IN LONG DISTANCE RACE

Outsider in Betting Brushed Up at Finish and Won Cleverly.

FAVORITE WAS NOT PLACED

Post Choices Beaten in Four Events Before a Big Crowd at the Belmont Park Track.

It was a matter of course that some new records were set at the Belmont Park race course yesterday, but in spite of the big day, with a record attendance for the Fall meeting, the only actual mark that was beaten was that for the five-and-a-half-furlong course, when Leonora W., second choice to Brother Frank, got home first in a smart finish before Pantoufle and Brother Frank, in 1:05 3-5, time that was three-fifths of a second better than the previous best race on the new course.

In both the mile and three-quarters on the flat for the Municipal Handicap, won by St. Bellane, and the three-mile steeplechase, won by Grandpa, new records were fixed, the chief reason, however, for the new marks being that the distances were new for the course, neither ever having been run before on the Belmont Park track. Aside from the time tests, which filled the track Superintendent with pride, especially in view of the fact that the course had been newly surveyed to prove that the distances were correct, the racing was of a thoroughly interesting character.

Three stakes were set for decision, and all of these made good races, though the popular interest centred in the contest for the Municipal Handicap, a race at one mile and three-quarters, the first race that ever has been run over the track from the stand back to the stand again.

The race was one of the most peculiar of the season, as in spite of the popular supposition that Bedouin could not stay, the Duryea gelding, ridden by Shaw and carrying 108 pounds, was sent out to make the pace, and took the track from Outcome in the first strides of the contest, after Outcome broke first, with Right Royal at her shoulders. From the moment that Bedouin showed in the lead the other horses were steadied, the pace being moderate and Bedouin leading on sufferance, with Right Royal and The Southerner alternating second and third to the beginning of the last turn, where The Southerner dropped back and St. Bellane moved up from fourth place to second. In this order the horses turned into the stretch, with Bedouin still leading and seeming to have the race at his mercy, Bedouin galloping in front with Shaw sitting back and apparently having a lot in reserve, into the last seventy-five yards.

St. Bellane, Right Royal, and Outcome there closed from behind with something of a rattle, but Bedouin was going so easily to that point that his backers already were cheering in anticipation, believing that Shaw had only to let down the Duryea gelding to come away and win as he pleased. Shaw did let down Bedouin just before the last fifty yards, but Bedouin stopped just as he was called on, and failed so fast in the final strides that he was not even third, St. Bellane, coming with a smart burst at the end, winning rather handily, a good half length before Right Royal, which was second in a head finish with Outcome and Bedouin for second money. The time of the race was 2:59, a track record for the distance, but two seconds behind the record for stakes made by Major Daingerfield two years ago at Morris Park.

For the Nursery Handicap Perverse and Ironsides started as favorites, coupled in the betting as the Whitney entry, at 13 to 5 in a field of ten starters, including the added horse Whimsical, the latter and Waterwing starting as equal second choices. In the race down the straight course Perverse, which early in the contest swerved to the outside part of the track, still had speed enough to get to the front, and, making most of the running, won ridden out by a length and a half from Tiptoe of the Belmont entry, which closed from back in the crowd in the finish and beat Whimsical, on the rail, a neck for second place. WILSON MARSHALL DINED.

Larchmont Yacht Club Tenders Testimonial to Atlantic's Owner.

A testimonial banquet was tendered to Wilson Marshell by the Larchmont Yacht Club last evening in honor of the victory of the schooner Atlantic in the ocean race from Sandy Hook to the Lizard in the contest for the Kaiser's Gold Cup. The guests of honor, besides the owner of the winning yacht, were William Gardner, her designer; Capt. Charles Barr, her skipper; Fred Hoyt, her navigator, and those who accompanied her on her record-breaking trip, Morton W. Smith, L. B. Ostrander, C. D. Seely, F. A. Berkman, and S. P. Downes. Seventy yachtsmen gathered about the board spread in the banquet hall, presided over by Commodore A. C. Bostwick of the Larchmont Club.

The room was arranged to represent a tent and was beautifully decorated with the entwined American and German colors and the burgees of the leading American yacht clubs. The tables were arranged in a square inclosing a dais, draped with the private Marshall signal, on which was placed the magnificent trophy of the race. A tablet commemorated the six world's records made by the Atlantic on the trip—the record to tha Scilly Islands, 11 days 16 hours 21 minutes; to the Lizard, 12 days 4 hours 1 minute 19 seconds; to the Needles and to Southampton, besides the record for the best day's run from noon to noon, 341 knots, and the average hourly run of 10.57 knots.

Commodore Bostwick introduced Judge John Proctor Clark, who paid eloquent tribute to the sportsmanship that prompted the Atlantic's entry. To this Mr. Marshall responded, saying the Atlantic would enter the next ocean race, be it for a cup offered by King Edward or Emperor William, who had each expressed the wish to make the proffer. He told of the reception accorded to them in England, when Sir Thomas Lipton said he would not cease his efforts to lift the America's Cup as long as he lived, but would try again as soon as he could find a designer able to compete with Herreshoff and Gardner. He also told of R. P. Houston's proposal to build a challenger and try for the cup, ending with a glowing tribute to Designer Gardner, Skipper Barr, Navigator Hoyt, and his guests, who, he said, had all earned their passage by pulling ropes with the crew.

Morton W. Smith recited the story of the trip across, while William Gardner, Clay Andrue, and others responded to toasts.

ENGLISH POLO PLAYER ON AMERICAN TOUR

Has Made Study of American Methods of Play.

SUCCESSFUL CLUB SEASON

Early Date Favored for Championships—Chauncey's High Rating Evidence of Young Players' Improvement.

T. B. Drybrough, one of the polo authorities in England, has been making a brief visit to America, and he has been a guest at many of the leading polo clubs and has observed the game as played by some of the best teams in this country. He will sail for home on Tuesday. Mr. Drybrough has met most of the members of the Executive Committee of our Polo Association, and has discussed in an informal manner the possibility of an international series of games in the near future. The Chairman of the Polo Association, H. L. Herbert, lately returned from England, and he, too, had an opportunity of talking over the subject with some of the leaders in the game. Nothing definite, however, has thus far been arranged.

As the English players hold the international cup, there is a feeling among the foreign players that America should send a team across the water to win the trophy, if there is any strong desire for international polo here. Efforts have been made for two years to get a team of English players to visit America, but the difficulties in the transportation of ponies, as well as the inability of getting a representative team to make the trip, have always caused the hitch that stood in the way of international competitions.

Mr. Drybrough has been the guest for the last few days of R. D. G. Douglas of Orange. Mr. Douglas has captained the Essex County Country Club's team this season, and Mr. Dryhrough has done a little practicing with the members on the club field. He watched the young men of Squadron A and Great Neck in their game last week at Van Cortlandt Park, and, while the standard of play was not high, he was well pleased at the showing of comparatively new players.

The polo season is now practically at an end, although Squadron A will continue to practice at Van Cortlandt Park for the balance of the month. The season has been chiefly marked in respect to the interest among the young element. The Spring and Summer tournaments were all well supported, and with the exception of the failure to support the National championships, the season has been very successful.

Rockaway and the Westchester Country Club have been prominent in most of the big events. Daniel Chauncey, Jr., of Rockaway has made the greatest strides of the younger players, as he now stands at the handicap rating of 6 goals, higher than any other player of his age. Rene La Montagne, Jr., remains at his rank of 5, but he is almost sure to go to 6 next season. Squadron A has had the most successful year in its polo history. The troopers took part in more games away from home than ever before, and, although accidents weakened the playing force of the squadron team, it nevertheless won four trophies during the year.

R. C. Lawrence, whose eyes were injured in one of the Newport games, expects to get back in the game next year, and so does Leavitt J. Hunt, whose collarbone was broken in one of the Rockaway games. Rumson, Great Neck, New Haven, Rumford of Providence, R. I., and Meadow Brook have all made a creditable showing, and the demand for tournament dates next Spring promises to be greater than ever. The tendency for early tournaments is growing, and it is quite likely that the National championship will be held in May or June hereafter.

Dyker Meadow Golf Handicap.

Richard S. Lord won the final monthly handicap yesterday on the links of the Dyker Meadow Golf Club near Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn. He had a generous handicap of 14, but made the very creditable gross score of 90, giving him the net score of 76 strokes. George H. Barnes made the lowest gross score, 84 strokes. Nearly forty members took part in the contest and the leaders were all closely bunched. The greens were in excellent condition. The best scores in the contest were: Richard S. Lord, 90, 14—76; John W. Raymond, 87, 10—77; C. B. Van Brunt, 87, 9—78; James H. Merritt, 87, 9—78; S. J. Phillips, 86, 8—78; George H. Barnes, 84, 5—79; H. L. Bates, 86, 7—79; W. H. Thurston, 93, 12—81; Daniel Chauncey, 90, 7—83; Thomas A. Eddy, 94, 10—84; W. J. Geddes, 92, 7—85; L. C. Collins, 105, 20—85; J. E. Butts, 101, 16—85; W. B. Putnam, 99, 12—87; P. S. Mallett, 105, 16—89.

Championship Golf at Englewood.

The final round was played yesterday on the links of the Englewood Golf Club for the club championship. The players qualified at thirty-six holes, and the leading sixteen will meet during the coming weeks at match play for the championship. Oswald Kirkby led the eligible field with a total of 166, while Murray Olyphant, ex-champion of New Jersey, came second with 177. The sixteen who qualified are: Oswald Kirkby, 166; Murray Olyphant, 177; T. R. Fell, 180; M. R. Howe, 181; W. E. F. Moore, 186; J. G. Dittmar, 187; A. B. Childs, 189; C. E. McCann, 189; S. B. HIGH PIER RENTALS DRIVE COMMERCE AWAY

Featherson Warns the City Against Increasing Dock Rates.

STEAMSHIP LINES PROTEST

Cunard and Mercantile Marine Companies Offer to Lease Chelsea Piers, but Want a Reduced Rate.

That pier rentals in New York are excessive and are militnting against the commerce of the port is the contention of the steamship people of the city, and it is upheld by Commissioner Featherson of the Department of Docks and Ferries. Mayor McClellan also is convinced of the justice of the contention, and was responsible for the clause in the Democratic city platform advocating a reduction in these charges.

It is an especially live issue at this time, when work is progressing on the $18,000,000 Chelsea dock improvement, and when one steamship company, the Allan Line, has decided to withdraw from this port because of excessive pier rentals. Two of the leading steamship corporations, the International Mercantile Marine Company and the Cunard Steamship Company, have joined in a protest to the Dock Commissioner against charging rates on the Chelsea docks which would require the companies to pay interest on the improvement and pay for the improvement itself, including the new street and marginal ways, within a period of thirty years. Both companies contend that the increase in the charges for docks has grown so rapidly in the last few years that the city will be cutting off its nose to spite its face in following the policy laid down by the Low administration.

The steamship companies contend that they should not be charged for non-depreciating improvements. In other words, they contend that they should not he charged the entire cost of laying out new streets along the water front, as had been planned, but only for the piers which they occupy.

The Chelsea improvement will provide piers 825 feet long, as against a range of 700 to 725 at present, so that the largest steamships can be adequately accommodated. Vice President P. A. S. Franklin, representing the International Mercantile Marine Company, and Vernon H. Brown, agent for the Cunard Company, have joined in a letter to the Dock Department outlining their entire contention, and giving reasons why the city should act with fairness toward the steamship lines.

"We beg to advise you," they say in their letter, "that the International Mercantile Marine Company is prepared to lease the four and one-half northerly piers and bulkheads adjoining, and the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, the two and one-half southerly piers and bulkheads adjoining, provided double-decked sheds suitable for our passenger and freight business (similar to those on Piers 49 and 51) are erected and fully equipped with electricity and steam for lighting and power purposes, the plans for all of which are to meet with our approval, at $71,350 per annum per pier, and $33,675 per annum per half pier, subject to the following conditions:

"Terms of lease to be for ten years, with at least two renewal periods of ten years each.

"Ships to be kept dredged to the depth of forty feet mean low water, at the expense of the city.

"Property to be kept insured by the city against usual risks.

"The leases now held by our respective companies and subsidiary companies on Piers 14, 15, 39, 48, 49, 50, 51, and 52 are to be canceled when we get possession of the completed Chelsea Piers, and the equipped sheds on the piers so vacated by us are thereupon to be valued by a committee of two, one member to be appointed by the city and the other by the International Mercantile Marine Company and the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, and should it be impossible for them to agree then they are to select a third member.

"The total value of these sheds, as determined by such committee, is to be paid to us in cash, or deducted from the agreed value of such depreciating property on the Chelsea Piers as may be rented to us upon which our rental is based, or as are to be credited on our Chelsea rent with 5 per cent. per annum on said valuation of the old sheds during the term of the new leases, including renewals for thirty years or longer.

"From estimates received from you, we estimate that our proportion as outlined will reimburse the city for the interest which it will have to pay on the cost of the non-depreciating part of the improvement which we will use, namely, that from the easterly line of the bulkhead sheds to the pierhead line, except cost of construction of bulkhead wall, and will also reimburse the city for the interest and depreciations on the appreciating part of the improvement, such as the piers and sheds on the piers and bulkheads; therefore, should the cost of the improvement be less than the estimates upon which we have figured, and should the rate of interest which the city will have to pay for the money with which to make these improvements be less than 4½ per cent., then our per annum rental is to be reduced accordingly.

"In considering the foregoing, we think you should give due weight to the fact that our competitors from Boston and other ports have free wharfage, and that the export trade from New York is decreasing. A large proportion of it is now diverted to the Gulf and other ports where the cost of handling steamers is much less than at New York, due very largely to the excessive terminal charges at this port, the major portion of which is the pier hire."

The records of the Dock Department show the steady increase in pier rentals paid by the leading lines in the last twenty years, and to a large extent show why the commerce of the Port of New York has fallen off. At the present time the Cunard Line is paying $40,850 a year rental for half a pier in the Gansevoort section, and $76,250 for a full pier. The lines occupies Piers 51 and 52, the last named being the half pier, which is 70 feet wide by 703 feet long, the line having the use on only one side. The full pier is practically the same length, and is 110 feet wide.

Sixteen years ago the Cunard Line paid $30,500 a year for old Pier 40, which was 75 by 579 feet in dimensions. Four years later this pier was extended 90 feet, and the rental was increased to $36,570. Still later a price of $56,000 was fixed on the same style pier, 80 by 600 feet. Under the Chelsea improvement plans, the Hawkes estimate for the new piers was placed at about $110,000 a year, or about $40,000 in excess of what the companies are willing to pay for rentals.

In 1880 the White Star Line paid $42,000 for full piers occupied at that time, and an increase subsequently was made to $56,000 for an 80x600 foot pier. Piers 44 and 45 then were occupied. Now the White Star Line, one of the International companies, uses Piers 48 and 49 and pays $85,375 a year for each pier of 125x725 feet. The Leyland Line, from which the Allan Line sublet, occupied Pier 50, and also pays $84,375 for the full pier, as against little more than half that price for the same piers fifteen years ago.

"The city indeed is a harsh landlord in the matter of pier rentals," declared Dock Commissioner Featherson yesterday. "Rentals have increased from 25 to 50 per cent. in the last twenty years, and the burden is becoming too heavy for some of the lines.

"There has been no increase of rentals in the last few months, and there should be none if our commerce is to be held here. The lines docking at Boston and many other ports have free wharfage, and it makes an unjust discrimination against the lines docking in New York to keep raising the prices. This raising of pier rentals has been due to Controller Grout in a large measure. The Controller wants them high, and he has got them up high. Frequently the Finance Department has returned estimates to me as being too low for rentals, and they have had to be changed because of this.

"Little attention seems to be paid to the location of piers costing the same amount of money to build. It is only reasonable to suppose, however, that a pier in one section is worth more than a pier in another section, although costing equal amounts to build.

"Small lines carrying lumber from Savannah and Southern ports cannot afford to pay as much as the big trans-atlantic lines, and the increase in rentals has hit them even harder than the big lines. A result is that immense traffic is being diverted to Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other ports. This means that immense sums have been cut off from the pay of longshoremen and other handlers. In turn these men have spent far less money in the small stores along the water front, and the small storekeepers have been obliged to give up buildings rented from wealthy estates, so that in the long run the tendency has hurt rich and poor alike.

"The trouble lies in the fact that the city wants to realize from the piers the whole amount it spends on the improvements of the piers. Bonds for the total amount of the improvements are sold at 3½ per cent, and the rentals are based on a return of 5 per cent., which leaves 1½ per cent. for the sinking fund, or to pick up the bonds at maturity. This may seem fair to the public, but the public does not understand the situation.

"It is unfair to compel the steamship people to pay for laying out broad streets leading to the piers, which streets improve the adjoining property and yield the city a higher return in taxes. The rentals fixed at 5 per cent are based on the total amount the city has had to spend for land, for buildings on the land, and for other things which do not benefit the lessee of the pier at all, and for land which, in many cases, the lessee is not permitted to occupy or to use in any manner whatever.

"A continuation of this policy with the piers in the Chelsea section will make the rents there so high that the big steamship companies simply will not take them."

JUDGE ORDERS DUAL VERDICT.

Leaves Higher Court to Say Whether a Widow Gets $10,000 or $20,000.

Justice Dixon, in the Supreme Court at Jersey City, instructed a jury yesterday to return two verdicts, one for $10,000, the other for $20,000. The suit was brought hy Mrs. Anna S. Anable of Bradley Beach, N. J., whose husband, L. M. Anahle, was killed at the Asbury Park Station of the New Jersey Central Railroad on Oct. 18 last. He was insured in the Fidelity and Casualty Company for $20,000. The company did not deny that Mrs. Anable was entitled to recover, but contested the amount of its liability.

Counsel contended that Mrs. Anable was only entitled to $10,000. In proof a contract was submitted showing that if Mr. Anable was killed while a passenger on a railroad train his beneficiary was to receive the full amount of the policy, but if he was killed on a railroad, not being a passenger, then the compnny should only be liable for $10,000. The company submitted proof to show that Mr. Anable boarded a train at Bradley Beach. He left the train at Asbury Park to buy a newspaper. As he was returning the train started. He attempted to board it, fell under the wheels, and was killed.

Counsel for Mrs. Anable did not dispute the testimony as to the manner of Mr. Arable's death, but contended that he was legally a passenger, although he had momentarily left the train.

Justice Dixon said that the point was important and should be settled beyond dispute, so he directed the jury to return two verdicts, and sent the case to the Court of Errors and Appeals for final settlement.

EX-COUNTESS A PRISONER.

But Is Set Free in Yorkville Court—Speaks Six Languages.

A woman who said she had been a Russian Countess before she was married to a California lawyer, and discoursed fluently in six languages—Spanish, French, Swedish, Russian, German, and English—was before Magistrate Whitman yesterday. Policeman Diery said he had arrested the woman for safekeeping, having found her in a stupor on a stoop in East Forty-fifth Street on Friday night.

The woman told the Magistrate that sho was of Finnish birth and was a graduate of the University of Helsingfors. She had been married twice, she said; first to the Russian Count Baronovsky and then to George Hayford, a San Francisco lawyer. Both her husbands are dead, she said, and she is visiting at a house in East Seventy-seventh Street.

She said she had been taken ill after drinking a single glass of whisky. Magistrate Whitman was much interested in her on account of her evident refinement, and discharged her after having asked Miss Smith, the probationary officer, to see that the woman found her way home.

CAULIFLOWER TRUST NOW.

Long Island Farmers Keep Production Down and Prices Up.

Down Riverhead way, where the best caulliflowers in the world are grown, the farmers have decided that it would be profitable on account of the great demand to form a trust for its sale. Representatives of the trust reside and work farms in Riverhead, Southold, Peconic, Laurel, Jamesport, Cutchogue, Aquebogue, Calverton, and Manorville.

More than 8,000 barrels were shipped to the city markets by the trust the last three days of the past week. It is claimed that the light shipments were due to a backward season, but the maintenance of the high prevailing price is believed to have had something to do with it. From 15,000 to 20,000 barrels would he a more reasonable supply for the city's need, it is claimed, but then the price might drop.

ELEPHANT OUT FOR A STROLL.

Russo Lifts a Bale of Hay from a Wagon and Enjoys Himself.

Russo, the biggest of the four elephants that perform at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre, walked out of the stable at 156 East Fifty-seventh Street yesterday morning and started to stroll through the neighborhood. He found that he had it all to himself, for the women and children who happened to be passing at the time ran around the corner into Third Avenue.

Russo stopped in front of the East Fifty-seventh Street Court building and poked his trunk at Warden Lynch of the prison. The Warden took it on the run. Then Russo spied a wagon loaded with hay coming down the street. He stepped into the roadway, whisked off a bale, and was eating it when his keeper put in an appearance. Russo was led back to the stable.

The course covers the history of Western Europe down to our own times. The school also offers a course in art under Miss Alice J. Crosby, which consists of free-hand drawing and ornamental design. A large number of pupils have already registered for these courses.

ENLISTS JEROME IN WAR ON RAINES LAW HOTELS

Dr. Peters's Committee Finds the Magistrates Too Slow.

FALLS BACK ON THE OLD LAW

To Reach the Proprietors Who Continue Business in Defiance of the Ambler Act.

The Committee of Fourteen, which has the Rev. Dr. John P. Peters for Chairman and the suppression of illegal Raines law hotels for its object, published yesterday a statement of work from the Executive Committee. The report says, in substance, that while, by energetic cooperation of the Building, Excise, and Police Departments, the committee has been able to get more than 100 licenses revoked under the Ambler law, the readiness of the City Magistrates to grant adjournments and the willingness of the higher courts to issue injunctions acting as stays have practically neutralized the work of the committee. In this dilemma the committee has turned to District Attorney Jerome for assistance. This is the outcome of its appeal, according to the report:

"Mr. Jerome has agreed to begin proceedings against the various 'hotel' proprietors whose certificates have been revoked—not under the Ambler law, but under the previously existing liquor tax law, whose constitutionality has long been determined—for making false statements in their original applications."

This is a novel departure, and the members of the committee expect it to produce better results than any other procedure until the Ambler law has been tested in the higher courts. The test suits are now pending before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and a decision on them is hoped for within a few weeks. According to the report of the committee, the saloonkeepers whose places are illegal under the Ambler law have found powerful allies in the brewers. One company, it is said, has come forward openly to undo the revocation of the license of a place said to be particularly obnoxious.

"Not one of these cases has been tried," says the report, after telling of several arrests and instances where the proprietors are keeping their places open in spite of the revocation of their certificates; "some have been held for the Court of Special Sessions by the Magistrates. In other instances, however, the Magistrates have adjourned the cases; and some of the Magistrates, in spite of the fact that the violation of the law was clearly shown, have actually dismissed the cases brought before them.

"But not only has the law encountered obstacles in the Magistrates' courts; the practice has been commenced of obtaining injunctions preventing the police from interfering with the premises for which the revoked certificates were issued, and in the majority of instances such injunctions have been kept alive through repeated adjournments, to which the representative of the city's legal adviser, the Corporation Counsel, has been a consenting party.

"The power of 100 liquor sellers to resist the enforcement of a law which has been held constitutional by two Supreme Court Justices is a deplorable thing, and still more deplorable is it that they are able to make the delay of proceedings in court their weapon to defeat the public will.

"A new feature in these cases has recently appeared in the open backing hy a brewing company of one of these resorts. The Hotel Darlington was reported to us originally by the police as a place of very evil repute. It is known as the most disorderly hotel on Eighth Avenue, a resort for the lowest class of men and women. Investigation confirmed this evidence and also showed that it had no fire appliances of any kind.

"Finally the official inspection made by the Superintendent of Buildings proved that it violated the provisions of the law, and as a result of that inspection and the report of the same to the Excise Department the certificate was revoked.

"Thereupon the Pabst Brewing Company commenced an action to compel the Deputy Excise Commissioner to withdraw notice of revocation of license, and the Superintendent of Buildings to correct the report made to the Excise Department, on the ground that the building actually did comply with the requirements of the law, and secured a temporary injunction to restrain the police from interference with the place."

The report contrasts this behavior of the local brewers with that of the Brewers' Association of Buffalo, which organization, after the passing of the Ambler law, took steps to surrender the liquor license of all the Rains law hotels in the city.

The report says that two public officers who have ample power to act under the law are the Sheriff and the Commissioner of Excise, both of whom have failed to pay any attention to the representations of the committee.

PRINCETON CLASS FIGHT.

Bruised Heads, Blackened Eyes, and Some Weird Costumes.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, Oct. 7.—The clash between the Princeton sophomore and freshman classes came this afternoon and resulted in a fierce scrimmage. The sophomores in their orange and black head pieces occupied the grand stand at the annual inter-class baseball game, while the freshmen were forced to take seats in the bleachers amid the taunts of the 1908 students.

The senior class, over 200 strong, was on hand to see fair play, but the members soon forgot all about duty and danced about in their crazy quilt costumes like nineteen-year-olds. One student was clad in a shiny, long coat to represent a new preceptor, and chained to him were two lads made up to represent simple students. Six seniors were dressed in pink pajamas and wore light colored wigs. They were supposed to be the "Iole sisters." Two wore only barrels about their waists to indicate the primitive dress of Adam and Eve.

The seniors broke up the baseball game in the fifth inning when the freshmen had a lead of 5 to 0. The minute the seniors rushed on the diamond the juniors organized the freshmen in a body and paraded them up Williams Street, where the sophomores had assembled to meet the onslaught.

The 1908 men charged in two sections, and a fist battle was started. There were many bruised heads and blackened eyes when it was over. The sophomores were unable to check the advance, and the entering students paraded a quarter of a mile with a fierce fight raging along their flanks.

STREET CAR STRIKES UNWISE.

President Mahon Says Arbitration Is Best Every Time.

William D. Mahon, President of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, whose order was ignored in the Interborough strike, has issued an address to the members of his order urging arbitration instead of strikes. The Interborough strike, which was a failure and ended in the collapse of the trainmen's organization here, was ordered in violation of the rules of the Amalgamated Association. President Mahon, in his address, says:

"There are some in our organization who advocate the striking from our constitution of all laws pertaining to arbitration. Such an act would be a serious mistake. Voluntary arbitration has not been a failure. Wherever we have used it the results have been satisfactory. We must bear in mind that in our position as street and electric railway employes we are servants of the public as well as of the company, and that the public is entitled to a certain amount of consideration at our hands. The only means we have of carrying out such a policy is by arbitration, for by submitting our disputes to a disinterested board of arbitration we are able to reach a satisfactory adjustment without having inconvenienced the public or interfered with travel."

DETECTED BY SORE FINGER.

Clue That Landed a Negro Wanted for a Washington Robbery.

George H. Reppie, a negro, and formerly employed as a butler by a family named Thompson living at 1,393 Yale Street, Washington, was arrested yesterday morning by Detective Sergeants Daly and Braun on a charge of having stolen $400 worth of jewelry belonging to a daughter of his employer. The capture was made on a car at Columbus Avenue and Sixtieth Street.

The Washington police telegraphed a description of the negro to the police here, and Daly and Braun were detailed to look him up. One point in the description was that Reppie had the middle finger of his left hand wrapped up because of a felon. The detectives looked through the several sections of the city inhabited by negroes without success until about 2 o'clock yesterday morning when, while riding on a streetcar, they saw a negro with the middle finger of his left hand bound up in a cloth. They took him to Police Headquarters, where a number of pieces of the stolen jewelry were found in his pockets.

The prisoner admitted that he was the man wanted. He will be taken to Washington for prosecution.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—George H. Reppie, who was arrested to-day in New York for the robbery of the Thompson family, carried away jewelry consisting of a diamond ring, a gold watch, a loose diamond, a gold locket, a gold necklace set with amethysts, a gold brooch set with pearls, and a pearl pendant.

Detective Peck, who went to New York yesterday, returned here to-night bringing back nearly all the stolen articles.

LOTS OF BLUEFISH,

And Big Ones, Too, Caught Off Montauk Point, L. I.

Phenomenal catches of bluefish are being made daily off Montauk Point, L. I. Until within a fortnight ago the fishing had been rather tame, but since that time visitors have enjoyed the best kind of sport. Le Roy Wells of Manhattan caught a fifteen-pounder, which is said by old fishermen to be the largest ever caught with a hook and line.

The fish fought like a shark, and it required all the strength Mr. Wells possessed to land it. On Friday Frank Tuthill, Jr., caught 40 bluefish, weighing 400 pounds, or averaging over 10 pounds each.

Large catches are being made with nets by the professional fishermen. The laws relative to pound nets in Great South Bay and other waters of a tributary character have no force on the ocean three miles from shore. Hundreds of barrels of fish are being caught, iced, and shipped to the city daily.

Amateur fishermen are taken out to the fishing grounds in power launches or sailboats by old salts who know all the ways of the great game fish.

FOR THE HALL OF FAME.

Some of the Voters Refuse to Cast Ballot for Woman Immortals.

The University Senate, which is sitting in judgment on the celebrities nominated for the vacant niches in the Hall of Fame, met yesterday at the University Building to count the votes cast this year. Chancellor MacCracken presided. At a meeting of the Senate next week the men and women who are to be placed with the immortals will be made public.

Of the ninety-five men who have the right to vote eight refused to cast a ballot on the question of who the women should be whose names are to adorn the Hall of Fame. They were not very explicit about their reasons, but some stated politely that they did not think themselves competent to sit in judgment on the qualifications or the merits of women. The Chancellor's facetious remark on the point was:

"Had they been writers of the Gospels they would hardly have considered the names of the three Marys. Had they been Popes they would hardly have canonized at St. Monica or St. Scholastica."

Ambassador Whitelaw Reid sent a telegram stating that he had sent his ballot, but it had not arrived yesterday.

Other Public Bequests in the Will of the Late William A. Wheelock.

The will of William A. Wheelock, President of New York University, who was also a Director in the Equitable Life Assurance Society, was filed for probate in the Surrogates' office yesterday. The value of the estate is not set forth, but it is believed that it will amount to $2,000,000.

To memoralize the interest which the late Dr. John Hall took in the university the testator bequeaths $20,000 to the institution. To the Beneficent Congregational Church of Rhode Island, of which Mr. Wheelock was a member, $2,500 is bequeathed. The sum of $20,000 is set aside to be used by the widow, Mrs. Harriette Wheelock, and her son William and her son-in-law, George A. Strong, the executors, for aiding any person whom they deem worthy of assistance.

To the testator's employes various amounts are bequeathed. William Bailey, who waa in Mr. Wheelock's employ for forty years, is to receive $2,000; Mrs. M. E. Cockburn, his housekeeper, is to receive $1,000, and $1,000 is bequeathed to Joseph Weber, who was in Mr. Wheelock's employ for ten years. The residue of the estate is to go to Mrs. Wheelock and the testator's children, William Wheelock and Mrs. George A. Strong.

GOULD FACTION WAITS END OF RAMSEY'S FIGHT

Wabash Annual Meeting Put Off, Anticipating Injunction.

COURT MAY NAME TELLERS

Ousted Head of Company Applies for Intervention at Toledo—Maintains He Is Still President.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—The annual meeting of the Wabash Railroad, set for next Tuesday at Toledo, will be postponed until hearing has been had on the petition for a permanent injunction against the voting of the Iron Mountain and Missouri Pacific holdings of the stock, and also until Joseph Ramsey, Jr., has exhausted his efforts to defeat the Gould interests.

The Goulds profess to have unquestionably a voting majority as against Ramsey The decision was reached yesterday in New York, however, that owing to the nature of the attacks made by Ramsey it would be better to have a full investigation than to attempt to bring matters to a head on Tuesday.

Mr. Gould was advised this morning that in all probability the St. Louis Circuit Court on Monday morning would grant a temporary injunction. This would prevent Tuesday's meeting in any event, but the opposition has decided to wait until Mr. Ramsey thoroughly realizes that he is defeated.

President Delano said to-day:

"It would be indecorous for me to talk of the situation, and, for that matter, there is really nothing to say that the newspapers have not printed. I shall go to the annual meeting Tuesday, if it is held."

TOLEDO, Oct. 7.—The Gould-Ramsey contest was brought here to-day in an application to the Common Pleas Court by Ramsey for the appointment of Inspectors of Election at next week's meeting. The Ohio law provides for Inspectors, that the interests of stockholders of corporations may be safeguarded.

In his application Ramsey says the Inspectors who served at last year's meeting and who were to serve next Tuesday are not qualified either by education or experience to pass upon the eligibility of Directors. These men are Fred Reynolds, nephew of Col. Reynolds, Director of the Wabash; A. W. Colton of the Wabash Steamship Line, and C. W. Newton, local agent.

Ramsey alleges that certain stockholders intend fraudulently and illegally to vote defective proxies. He affirms that he is still President of the road and represents 10 per cent. of the stockholdere. Counsel for the Wabash and George Gould's attorney, who are contesting the application, say the Inspectors have purely ministerial, and not judicial, powers. The court will appoint the Inspectors if Ramsey can prove that he represents 10 per cent. of the stockholders. He has until Monday to furnish proofs.

AFTER KIDNAPPER BAND.

Brooklyn Police Will Try to Bring Two Men Back from Italy.

District Attorney Clarke of Brooklyn, who has taken a hand in the investigation of the case of Tony Manendino, the boy who was found in Manhattan, had the lad's father, Frank Manendino, summoned yesterday to his office and had a long talk with him. After the interview Mr. Clarke said he believed Manendino, from fear, was not disposed to aid the police in their hunt for the kidnappers.

Manendino has been called to appear before the Grand Jury to-morrow, when he will be closely questioned as to what he knows about the case.

Acting Captain Carson is angry over the behavior of Manendino. It is alleged that the man on Friday tried to get a pass to Raymond Street Jail from the Sheriff's office, intending to visit Salvator Picona, who is under arrest as a suspect in the kidnapping case. Manendino did not get the pass.

Two of Capt. Carson's detectives yesterday visited Dominick Neigero of Hackensack, N. J., whose wife and child were kidnapped, and had a talk with him. They expressed the belief that the Neigero kidnappers were the same men who carried off Tony Manendino.

The Brooklyn police will ask the Federal Government to try to extradite two men who are now in Italy and who are believed to have been concerned in the kidnapping of Tony Mannino of Amity Street about a year ago. The two men went to Italy soon after the boy was restored to his parents.

JERSEY CHICKEN TRAGEDY.

Fowls Poisoned in the Street, and the Town Must Pay, Owner Says.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Oct. 7.—The Englewood Council has referred to the Corporation Counsel a complicated legal question relating to Frank Walker's dead chickens. Mr. Walker found several of his choice fowls dead near his home, on one of the town roads, and has notified the Council that it is responsible for his chickens poisoned on the highways. He threatens to sue unless settlement is made.

Mr. Walker told the Council that his chickens had wandered across the road into Mrs. Keowires's yard, that she had shooed them away, but being only chickens they had wandered across again, at times when she had lines of freshly laundered clothes hanging there; that they nested in her clean linen, and enraged her. Somebody had poisoned them, but he said he wasn't going to accuse any one in public. But he had his suspicions.

Anyway, the dose had been administered in the public thoroughfare, he said, which wouldn't have happened if the police protection had been all it should have been. Therefore he wanted the town to pay for his chickens.

The Council raised the point that Mr. Walker's chickens had no legal right to cross the road, and asked the City Counsel to find only if the point is well taken.

TRAIN CRASHES INTO AUTO.

Boy Dead, Two Women Injured—Men Jump to Safety.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Oct. 7.—A touring car, in which were the owner, Walter G. Cowles of Hartford and members of his family, was wrecked by the Fitchburg express from New York over the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad at Taylor's Crossing, a village of Cobalt, to-night. Mr. Cowles's five-year-old son died on a train while being brought here with his parents.

Mr. Cowles and his chauffeur, Arthur Franz, were but slightly hurt, as they jumped clear of the car at the instant the locomotive struck it. Mrs. Cowles and Mrs. L. A. Keady, also of Hartford, were caught in the body of the car and very badly injured. Both are in the Middlesex County Hospital, and Mrs. Keady it is expected, will die.

The first intimation of danger, Franz says, was when the locomotive headlight flashed upon them as he was running the car up a grade. The crash came instantly. Mr. Cowles and his party had made a trip about Middletown. The chauffeur was not familiar with the country.

30,000 REVOLUTIONISTS MEET IN UNION SQUARE

East Siders Protest Against Russian Atrocities.

SAY AMERICA IS LUKEWARM

Not Allowed to March Up Fifth Avenue—Police in Force, but Have Little to Do.

East side Russian revolutionists, 30,000 strong, held a demonstration in Union Square last night. They starter at Rutgers Street, and by the time they reached Union Square, at 8 o'clock, the neighborhood was jammed with men and women who had come in the parade.

When about 9 o'clock Simon Pollock, one of the speakers, suggested three cheers for the Russian revolutionist and Russian liberty, a shout went up which was heard at the Flatiron Building.

Many of the seventy-two organizations represented in the parade were avowedly Socialistic in purpose, and, although red flags were few, there were red banners enough with sharp mottoes against the Russian Government, the Czar, and the Russian soldiery. Great throngs singing the "Marseillaise" were still arriving at Fourth Avenue and Fourteenth Street when Lawyer Jacob Pankin of the Eighth Assembly District called the crowd to order. Few could hear a word he said.

There is a feeling on the east side that since the negotiations between Russia and Japan the American people have lost sight of the internal troubles in Russia. These troubles in Russia, all the speakers last night contended, are becoming more eggravated. The massacres, they say, are continuing in their home land worse than they were before the trouble with Russia and Japan was settled, and yet, as they aver, the American press has been silent about them.

The Russian revolutionists said that one of the reasons for this was that America sought to get an open market in Russia, and that the reports of massacres were so well censored that little remained of them when they got into the papers here.

The police got the tip during the day that the parade was to take place. They were on hand in large numbers at every point. At Union Square Inspector Schmittberger and Capt. Dooley had 200 men.

Alexander Miller, the marshal of the parade, had a grievance along this line. The Revolutionists wanted to parade up Fifth Avenue. They were informed that they could march as far north as Seventeenth Street. They obeyed this injunction, and circled around Union Square.

In the parade were more than 2,000 women, who linked arms with the men and shouted as loud as any of them. There were many banners, telling the purpose of the parade and the sentiments of the paraders. These are a few:

"Nicky has called another peace conference. What hypocrisy!"

"Babies and mothers are being killed in cold blood at the command of the Czar's Ministers."

"Russian atrocities have no equal in the world's history."

The parade passed through Division street, through Pitt, through Orchard, through Houston, through First Street, through Fourth, a short distance on Second Avenue, and thence to Fourth Avenue, going up Fourth Avenue to Union Square. The wildest excitement pervaded the entire east side as it was going along. There were at least ten bands in line. When they had exhausted their répertoire of Russian tunes they began to play American and even local ones, down to "Tammany."

The crowd passed a resolution at the end of the meeting. In part it said:

"The demonstration at Union Square was called to express indignation at the shameful tactics adopted by the Russian Government against all nationalities in Russia. It also protests against the recent massacres of Jews, Poles, and other nationalities.

"This demonstration expresses its warmest sympathies with the Russian revolutionary party, and hopes that the American people and the American press will not cease in their condemnation of the atrocities which are being committed in Russia."

The speakers emphasized the sentiments expressed in the resolutions.

TAFT AT SANDY HOOK.

He Inspects Proving Grounds and Visits Forts Hancock and Hamilton.

Secretary of War William H. Taft, accompanied by Major Gen. John C. Bates, acting Chief of the General Staff; Brig. Gen. S. M. Mills, Chief of Artillery; Major Gen. John P. Story, retired, and Lieut. Col. Russell, acting Chief of Ordnance, made a tour of inspection of the fortifications and proving grounds at Sandy Hook yesterday.

With Gen. Story, who is Chairman of the Committee on Fortifications, recently appointed by President Roosevelt to revise the project of coast defenses for the United States, the party arrived in Jersey City from Washington yesterday morning. At Jersey City they were met by the steamship General Meigs of the Quartermaster's Department, which conveyed them to Fort Hancock and the proving grounds.

At Fort Hancock the artillerymen were paraded in honor of the Secretary, after which Secretary Taft and his party made a tour of inspection of the fortification. In order to show the Secretary what the big guns guarding the entrance to New York harbor could do a 12-inch shell was fired across Ambrose Channel. Later on several other tests and exhibitions of the power of the great ordnance commanding the harbor entrance were made for the benefit of Mr. Taft. He afterward expressed entire satisfaction with what he had seen.

On their way back to New York Secretary Taft and his party visited Fort Hamilton. There the plans for the contemplated improvements were explained to him in detail, and again the Secretary expressed his approval. From Fort Hamilton the Secretary and the army officers returned to New York.

FREE-FOR-ALL FIGHT IN COLUMBIA GAME

Bailey of Wesleyan Jumps on the Man with the Ball.

COACH MORLEY IN THE FRAY

Rushes on Field and Strikes Offender, Precipitating a Riot That the Police Have to Quell.

A free-for-all fight, engaging the players of both the Columbia and Wesleyan teams, in the course of which Coach Morley landed a stiff right-hander on the nose of Full Back Bailey of Wesleyan, was the feature of the football game between the two universities at American League Park yesterday. Not until the police had beat a none-too-gentle tattoo upon the players with their clubs was the mêlée ended. For a few minutes a riot was threatened on the field of play, but prompt action of the cooler-headed quieted the crowd of fully 200 students, who leaped the fences prepared to mix in the fight and gave the police a chance to quell the disturbance.

It was the tremendous excitement attending the match, neither side being able to score, that brought about the unusual scene. During the first half there had been more than the allowable amount of roughness among the players, but with no serious conflict. The failure to tally aroused Columbia to a fine pitch of hard tackling and man-handling play in the second half.

Right at the start of the second half Armstrong broke through the Wesleyan line and tackled Quarter Back Van Surdam so violently that the plucky Wesleyan man needed nearly ten minutes to get around again. Van Surdam had been doing the brilliant playing of the game. It was after this that the ball was passed back to Armstrong, and he attempted a run around left end. Armstrong got around all right, but in so doing stepped out of bounds. He kept on down the field for forty yards until Reuter downed him within fifteen yards of the Wesleyan goal. As he lay on the ground Bailey ran across the field to back up Reuter's play, and, leaping in the air, came down upon Armstrong's back with both knees, emphasizing his action by giving him a boot in the face in rolling off.

Instantly the riot started, and the wildest scene ever seen on a football field ensued with startling suddenness. The entire Columbia team and all of the substitutes started on the rush to avenge the injury to their man. A fierce yell of rage went up from the collegians in the stands, and hundreds started for the fray. Referee McClave tried to save Bailey, and his own team rallied round him.

For a brief period there was some vigorous slugging on both sides. Like a battering ram Coach "Bill" Morley, the ex-Texan Sheriff, split the crowd of fighting players in twain, and, although several tried to stop him, he let out as stiff a right-hand punch as was ever handed to any one. It landed fair upon Bailey's nose at the bridge, and Bailey reeled and went down and out.

The police were upon the fighting players by this time, and they restored order with a liberal use of their sticks. Bailey came back to life, and was hustled over to the Wesleyan side of the field. This was directly under the west stand, upon which 2,000 Columbia students were seated. They called Bailey all the names on the calendar, and he was finally escorted from the field by the police.

After the match it was admitted that both teams had been flagrantly rough in the endeavor to score. Late last night Armstrong was reported to be badly used up as the result of Bailey's action.

CITY WINS OLD SUIT.

Was Based on Fire Apparatus Patents, and Had Been Pending 14 Years.

After the case had been pending in the various courts for fourteen years, Judge Hazel of the United States Circuit Court handed down a decision yesterday against the Bragg Manufacturing Company in its suit for damages against the City of New York for alleged infringement of patent rights. The action is based on the allegation that the city had adopted the company's patent for an automatic device for striking alarms and releasing horses in the fire engine houses of the city.

In his decision Judge Hazel showed that similar devices, a right to the use of which the city held, were put in use prior to the issuance of the Bragg patent. The Bragg company won similar suits in other cities.

THE PASSING OF RANCHO DEL PASO

James B. Haggin's Stock Farm, the Greatest Nursery of Thoroughbreds in the World.

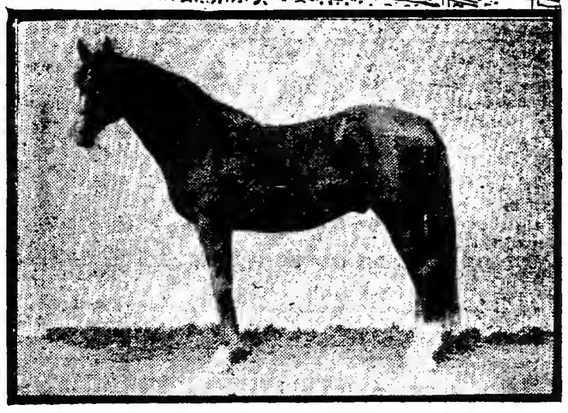
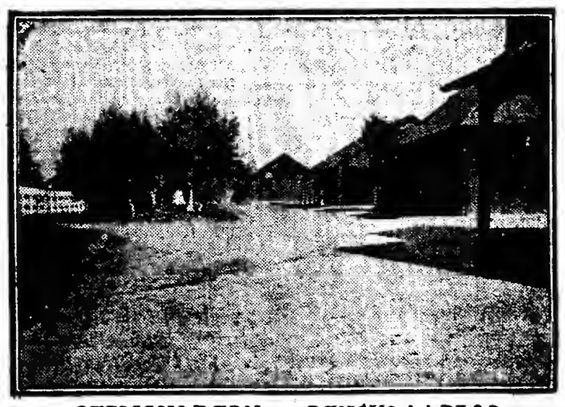
RANCHO del PASO

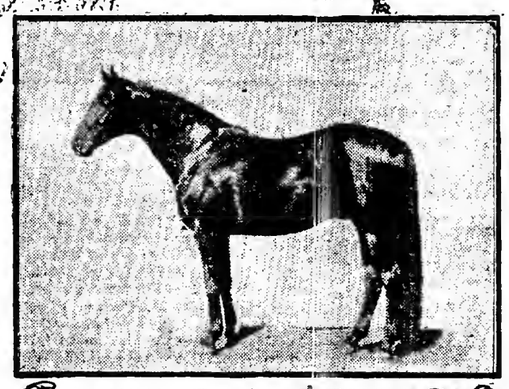


IMP. WATERCRESS.

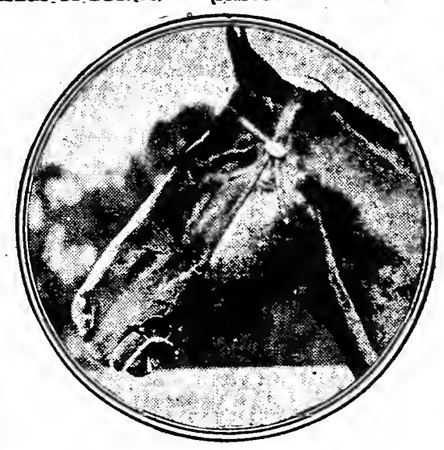


STALLION BARN. —RANCHO del PASO

JAMES B. HAGGIN



STAR RUBY



IMP. ST. GATIEN.

Watercress, St. Gautien, Sir Modred, Golden Garter, Star Ruby, Goldfinch and Others of the Greatest Thoroughbred Sires to Go Under the Hammer---Why the Silent Old Man of the Turf Retires.

HORSEMEN of two continents sat up abruptly last week when James B. Haggin, the veteran turf colossus, whose array of thoroughbreds numbers upward of a thousand head, briefly announced his intention of closing out Rancho del Paso as a stock farm. Clubhouse, stable, and paddock folk have Rancho del Paso at their finger ends, but outsiders may hear with surprise that this vast California domain on the Sacramento River, comprising 44,000 acres and homing 600 equine aristocrats, is the court royal and cradle of the thoroughbred in this country, the greatest stud farm in the racing world. And its days are numbered.

Every mare, colt, and stallion on the place will soon be bundled aboard a train of forty cars—Pullmans of their kind—preparatory to what promises to be the greatest horse sale ever negotiated in the United States, and probably the world. What is their value? What horses are among them? Why are they to be sold?

Seeking an answer to these queries, a writer for THE SUNDAY TIMES found the grand old man of the turf in his Broad Street offices—a deep-browed, shrewd-eyed, stalwart figure, and as keen a judge of men and horses as ever amassed a fortune or owned a Suburban winner. Temporarily pigeonholing his immense mining and railway interests and mentally reviewing his career on the turf, Mr. Haggin explained that the exigencies of business had dictated the sale of the Rancho del Paso horses, although he intended maintaining his country place in Kentucky.

"It is naturally with some regret that this decision has been reached," he vouchsafed, "but a man cannot serve two masters, and the horse is too jealous a one to thrive on divided attention. At present it is my purpose to retain my California property with a view to grain and fruit rather than stock raising. But the horses will be sold to the last head. Plans are being matured to ship them to New York, where they will be auctioned early in December. No, none of them will be transferred to the Kentucky place. They will all be sold to the highest bidders."

"How many animals are there at Rancho del Paso?" was asked. His answer—a startling one—indicated his immense interests as a turf patron when he admitted: "I have no exact idea, hardly an approximate one, of the number of horses on the place. But I think there are about 600 head. Yes, they are all thoroughbreds—Watercress, St. Gatien, Sir Modred, Golden Garter, Star Ruby, Bassetlaw, Goldfinch, who was bred by Lord Alington, and scores of others scarcely less valuable and familiar in their way. My regret over parting with them is more sentimental than practical, for, generally speaking, neither the California nor my Kentucky property has ever yielded an adequate return in dollars and cents. Nowadays every extensive owner of horses is misled by sentiment into breeding and raising his own candidates—a very costly hobby in the main. But so long as men have the price and are willing to humor the sentiment, it is their own business."

"Will you keep Hamburg Belle and Waterboy?"

"Yes; also Africander and Watercolor, for the present at least."

"Is there any likelihood of Hamburg Belle and Sysonby being matched this season?" was ventured.

"No," was the prompt and candid reply. "It would be useless. Hamburg Belle cannot beat Sysonby. Sysonby, in my opinion, is the best performer probably that the turf has ever known. Salvator was just as good in his day, but horse breeding and training have become more of a science than in those days, and to my mind the best horse of to-day is the best horse in the history of the turf. We read considerable about Arabian horses," continued the veteran turfman, "but the best of them would not be one, two, three with any one of a dozen horses now running in this country and Europe."

"Comparing Hamburg Belle and Sysonby, in your judgment and experience has a mare ever the same stamina and speed as a stallion?"

"Only in very rare instances. Horses, nine times in ten, have more staying power, as well as more speed, than the other sex, and then a successful stallion is worth his weight in gold many times over for breeding purposes after his retirement from the turf. At the same time, a breeding farm is always a poor investment financially, and at best demands close attention—more, in fact, than it is possible for a busy man like myself to give it," concluded the owner and breeder of more famous horses than any man living.

If there are better known men in the racing world than James B. Haggin, it is attributable mainly to his persistant self-effacement. While there are a dozen of his horses in the very front rank to-day, their owners, so far as the general public is aware, are a Whitney, a Paget, or some one else. The Haggin colors are seldom or never seen, and his name is rarely mentioned by the vast throngs that witness an Africander, a Hamburg Belle, a Waterboy, a Savable, or a Salvator triumph, past or present.

Memorizing his partial retirement from the turf, a review of his remarkable career becomes timely. And an extraordinary one it has been, rivaling those Arabian tales which the names of James Ben Ali Haggin suggests. Starting in Mercer County, Kentucky, nearly four generations ago, and picking up an education preparatory to studying law, he early took himself, with his wits and ambition, to the town of Natchez, in Mississippi. There for a time he met with a fair showing of success. But it was not enough, and his star soon led him southward to New Orleans, where he reeched the suburbs of fortune, a near enough view to whet him keenly for a nearer prospect.

The year 1849 and the golden dawn of California persuaded him thither, and his shingle was soon attracting a procession of pay-ore clients in San Francisco. California and its people suited him exactly, and he suited them so well that one morning a very few years later he awoke and found himself a millionaire many times multiplied.

Being a Kentuckian, with a love of horses bred in the bone, the man of mines and millions began to have racing ambitions, as an outgrowth of which he began recruiting a stable and then sundry broad acres whereon his horses might thrive under his eye. Rancho del Paso was the sequel—an American principality which one may pass a week in driving or riding through. Six hundred miles of fences are said to bound its epic pastures, although but a bare sixth of the magnificent domain is actually occupied.

Gaining there a taste for the soil, the master of Rancho del Paso branched out by organizing a company which to-day owns some 400,000 acres of rich vine and fruit lands in the California vineyard and orange regions. And Rancho del Paso, shed of its thoroughbreds, will probably invite settlers—small farmers—as have the other Haggin lands on the Pacific slope. Meanwhile its owner occupies a uniquo niche in the American Hall of Fortune. No man in the Street is more democratic and approachable, especially when the horse is the means of introduction.

Of the greater Rancho del Paso horses to be auctioned in a few weeks Sir Modred, Darebin, and others are of Australian origin, while Watercress and others are of English importation, together with the great St. Gatien, who once ran a dead heat for the Derby. On Rancho del Paso it was that Salvator sat Savable, winner of the 1902 Futurity, and Star Ruby is the sire of Africander, winner of the 1903 Suburban. There it was also that Watershed and a hundred yearling companions were bred and shipped to England several seasons ago, Watershed, bearing the Whitney colors, subsequently winning the famous Cambridgeshire Handicap. From the banks of the Sacramento likewise hailed the great Nasturtium, the $50,000 horse in which William C. Whitney and James B. Haggin had equal shares.

It is hardly less than extraordinary that such an important racing factor should preferably remain behind the scenes while his racing partners reap the glory of victory. Have you seen Hamburg Belle or Waterboy or Africander or Irish Lad triumph at Sheepshead Bay, Saratoga, or elsewhere when brassy lungs raved and roared in the betting ring, where on their wooden stools sat the Sadducees and Pharisees of the track, wise among men, their emotions cloaked, their souls masked, as impassive as the immobile Sphinx? Stand a moment when the Belle or Irish Lad or Africander is winning, and the man behind will push you on, to be in turn pushed on by somebody else. The clamor rages. Roar becomes uproar. Curses, laughter, execrations, shrill paeans of joy, and disappointed profundos mix and mingle with the names, as occasion dictates, of Sydney Paget, Walter Jennings, G. B. Morris, Whitney, and others. One seldom hears of Haggin, often the real owner of such horses. His have mostly been vicarious victories.

In the name of the late Charles Littlefield, the famous Waterboy, bred by Mr. Haggin, and acknowledged champion of 1903, won a place in racing romence. As a three-year-old a few days before the Belmont Stakes was run, the colt, a brother of Watercolor by the same sire, Watercress, now to be sold, fractured his thigh bone, and for four months was wearing splints at Morris Park. His recovery was a brilliant triumph for the veterinarian. Fate intervened a few days before the Suburban of 1903, and heavy rains made it impossible for the giant black, as Waterboy is called, to start in that classic, being as helpless as a babe or as Irish Lad in the mud.

As winner of the Brooklyn Handicap of that year Irish Lad carried 115 pounds in the Suburban Renewal, which was subsequently run, against 112 pounds by Waterboy. Goldsmith, the gamest colt that ever bore the Whitney colors, was also a starter. He had just won a creditable race so impressively that many accorded him a fighting chance in the Renewal. But his way was one of disappointments, for the race was such a feather for the Lad, who, though second, forced Waterboy to almost break his heart to win, that many competent judges declared no English Derby winner had ever shown better form. Irish Lad did nothing better in 1903, notwithstanding his defeat of Hermis over the Saratoga course a few weeks later.

Six days after the Suburban Renewal, won by Waterboy in track record time—2:04 3-5—the great horse achieved another triumph by taking the Brighton Handicap in 2:03 1-3, a standing record for either a straightaway or oval track.

Glancing back over the racing career of James B. Haggin, it will be seen to cover scarcely more than twenty years. In 1883 he owned no horses, but two years later he appeared as winner of the Double Event at the old Jerome Park. This, he admits, gave him a hunger for turf laurels that ended in his becoming the racing colossus.

It was in 1885 that the Haggin colors were first seen on the Eastern racecourses. He had come like an unheralded Locbinvar out of the West, and, as there was much ante-post betting in those Homeric days, every race-bent person wanted to know about the Haggin stable. They began learning when Tyrant, by Great Tom out of Moselle, romped off with both the Withers and Belmont Stakes. This was his début.

The year 1887 came, with the famous Brooklyn Handicap of that season, pictures of which are frequent today on the walls of country taverns and livery stables throughout the country. They show Dry Monopole defeating Blue Wing, the latter trained by John W. Rogers, trainer of Irish Lad, Gunfire, and other premier horses, and pocketing Hidalgo, a coal-hued Haggin horse, ridden by a coal-hued jockey. This was one of the supreme finishes of racing record, well worthy of pictorial reproduction each season by the Brooklyn Jockey Club.

Haggin horses grew weary of winning blue ribbons during the next few seasons which led up to 1890, the red-letter season of his career. For 1890 saw Salvator win the Suburban in perhaps the grandest battle ever waged over that classic course. A few days later Salvator again defeated Tenny, the little swayback who had run third in the Suburban, and whose owner, David Pulsifer, arranged and rued the ever-memorable match from which the great Haggin stallion emerged a king of kings.

Report has it that 20,000 persons witnessed the historic struggle, which, fifteen years ago, prior to present epochal audiences, shows how intense was the feeling. Salvator was the favorite at 8 to 5. Michael F. Dwyer was backing his judgment of Tenny with a fortune. Then, as to-day, men had to push to get in, push for a chance to lose their money, and push to get out again.

Then, as now, the veteran California turfman was as inconspicuous in the crowd as the veriest plebeian burdened with the necessity of winning on a two-dollar plunge.

When the great chestnut led the way past the stand to the starting post the grand stand rose to him, as it likewise did to his plucky rival. Tenny had the rail, no slight advantage in a race run round the turn. Salvator, to pass him, must run around him.

Under a strong pull the mighty thoroughbreds, unruffled as satin, with muscles rolling in great ridges from haunch and shoulder as they sped neck and neck, covered the first quarter in 0:25. Gradually the pace quickened, and the second quarter was negotiated in 0:24½. Salvator had managed barely to get his nose in front. Slightly over 12 seconds were required for the sixth furlong, and it found Tenny a full length behind. Three lengths of daylight were showing at the mile, and jeers for the Pulsifer horse were mingled with cheers for the Haggin candidate. But the dusky jockey astride the latter, glancing over his shoulder, saw a sight which agitated him considerably.

For Tenny, having sulked, was starting to run again. Murphy, on Salvator, became anxious. He roused his mount a bit, and then a bit more as the enemy drew nearer inch by inch, slowly, surely, inexorably. Foot by foot the daylight was devoured as the great horses thundered down the stretch and past the judges, Salvator a bare nose in front, the time 2:03. It was not until another Haggin horse, Waterboy, ran the distance in 2:04 3-5, that the record made by Salvator was eclipsed.

Salvator, it may be added, made his famous mile record of 1:35½ over a straightaway course some weeks later, a performance never since equaled, mainly because the only course over which a straightaway mile could be run disappeared with the Monmouth Park track.

Years after their turf rivalry both Salvator and Tenny did duty at Rancho del Paso, whose proprietor thus admitted the signal merit of the Pulsifer horse.

Racegoers since then have become more or less acquainted with Robin Hood, a brother of Tenny, to whom he bears a marked resemblance both physically and temperamentally. Manager John Mackey, for many years Superintendent of Rancho del Paso, records the curious fact that the antagonism begun on the turf continued after Salvator and Tenny became stud mates in California, constant care having to be exercised lest the royal rivals do each other harm with tooth and heel.

Prior to his advent on the Sacramento Mr. Haggin had begun accumulating what now his magnificent Kentucky estate at Green Hills. Some 400 thoroughbreds are now barned and pastured there, but its days as a thoroughbred cradle are probably numbered, as have been those of Rancho del Paso. In fact, the master of Green Hills is seriously considering the conversion of a large section of the Kentucky property into agricultural rather than pasture land. It is the finest tobacco raising region in the country, so that tobacco may yet prove the undoing of the thoroughbred around Green Hills.

Besides the horses and events already mentioned, Ben Ali, named after a favorite son, won the Kentucky Derby for Mr. Haggin in 1886, only to be left at the post in the Suburban of 1887. Early in 1891 the Haggin colors suddenly disappeared from the turf, owing to the loss of another son, and it has only been of very recent years that the dean of the turf has again come forward in his own name.

Following his purchase of the noted Elmendorf stud in Kentucky, where Candlemas, a full brother of St. Blaise, was at the head of the stud, it has been gradually increased until it is second only to the Rancho del Paso stud. Among the famous horses—renowned fathers of the American turf—identified with Green Hills are, besides Africander and Waterboy, Ben Holladay, the most popular horse in the country six seasons ago; Kinley Mack, the only horse that ever won both the Brooklyn and Suburban Handicaps; Order, sire of Ornament, and only himself and his managers know how many brood mares of superior lineags.

While Green Hills boasts a half-million-dollar mansion—the home of the Haggins for a portion of each year—Rancho del Paso has only its horses and rambling barns, besides a modest frame residence, to wax vain over. Only six or eight thousand acres of the immense estate is under pasture—pasturs, that is, to suit the dainty taste of a thoroughbred.

Since his reappearance on the turf the California-Kentucky veteran has been by far the heaviest nominator in what are known as the produce stakes, comprising the Futurity, Matron, Stallion, Hopeful, and other substantial prizes.

His town house in Fifth Avenue is the Haggin home for ten months in the year, the only time its windows are darkened being the vacation period, which the family always spends in Kentucky. Despite his extensive interests in other directions, it perhaps is only when the dates of his yearling sales approach that the master of Rancho del Paso is supremely happy.

While the Haggin yearlings are traditionally promising and successful, it is recorded that King Thomas, who brought $38,000 as a yearling, never won a race until he was four years old. This is probably the highest price ever paid for a yearling in this country. Three Summers ago two Watercress yearlings fetched $21,000 and $17,000 respectively, while very often a Haggin two-year-old has fetched many times the amount asked and refused for the same horse as a yearling.

Born in Kentucky some eighty years ago, and migrating to California as a forty-niner, this eminent turfman wrung an immense fortune, with the late George Hearst and Marcue Daly, from the Anaconda and other copper mines. Midas-like, everything he touched turned to gold, and a goodly array of millions has stuck to his fingers. And perhaps his aversion to gambling in any form dictated his avowal to the writer that, in his opinion, the ugliest blot on the American racing escutcheon to-day is the fever for getting something for nothing which race-track betting fosters.

American Civilization Arraigned by a Hindu Sage

Hon. Ponambalam Ramanathan, Solicitor General of Ceylon, Studying Legal Conditions Here---Talks of Founding New College in India, Based on American Observations.

In spite of the lofty pillars of marble and the stately figure of Demosthenes that grace the spacious entrance hall of the New York Bar Association, giving something of an air of classic antiquity and Old World picturesqueness to the building, with its luxurious modern equipments, it is scarcely here that one would expect to meet a "Brahma-Jnani," as his disciples call him, from Ceylon. In all India to-day there are not many of these Jnanis, so they say, and those of them who are to be found there live a life of such retirement and are regarded with such profound reverence by their disciples and the communities where they dwell that the uninitiated stranger is inclined to hold them as a semi-mythical creation of the devout Hindu. Nevertheless, it was a real man, albeit from the dreamland of India, a veritable Brahma-Jnani, fresh from the academic groves of the newest cult at Greenacre, Me., who kept a prosaic appointment in the halls of the Bar Association the other day.

In his own land the Hindu sage is usually robed in flowing drapery and goes about with bare feet and bared head. But the Honorable Ponambalam Ramanathan, his Britannic Majesty's Solicitor General in Ceylon, has never donned the yellow gown of the sage, but wears a clerical cut coat of gray cloth, plain every-day shoes, and a snow-white turban. Thus arrayed, approaching noiselessly along the lobby of the Bar Association to greet his visitors, he fulfills much of one's preconceived notion of a Hindu sage, an impression that is enhanced when one notes the simple grace of his welcome and the gentle, almost childlike, interest that beams from his large eyes. This affability of the Orient has in it the very essence of courtesy, and seems a fit setting to the gospel of "Love and Light" that this Brahma-Jnani essays to preach to the elect of the New World.

A Jnani belongs to no particular sect of the Hindu, embracing all creeds, and concerns himself principally with the development of character. Love for all that lives, non-resentment of injury, contentment under misfortune, unwillingness to exact retribution from those who harm him are said to be his characteristics. Hence one is prepared to meet this gentleness of demeanor in Ramanathan, whom fame has declared to be one of India's Jnanis, at the same time that he is recognized as a man who has reached a high mark in the legal profession, is one of the two law advisers of the British Government in Ceylon, and is the possessor of many mansions and country seats in that beautiful land.

There is nothing of the foreigner, strange to say, in Ramanathan's use of English; just a shade of accent and a choice of phrase occasionally that recalls British usage in such matters. The low, melodious voice may be a racial peculiarity, though it fits the amiable temperament of the speaker admirably. A Hindu sage ordinarily may be an extremely formidable personage to meet; Ramanathan, however, has the gift of veiling whatever he has of mystic lore in so simple an exterior that one is led at first to regard him as being quite transparent, childlike, mentally. A little experience, however, reveals the "artless art" of the Oriental, that is able to convey so much of the acerbities of criticism or the profundity of learning in a conversational manner that is outwardly charming in its apparent naivete. Shorn of this charm, divested of this gentleness, the sage, standing in the great modern hallway of the New York Bar Association, with its pillars and statues surrounding him, may be said to have really measured the proud America of to-day with the India of venerable philosophies and religions—and if the sentiment of scorn is possible to the mild Jnani, it was certainly there, though unexpressed, as a result of his comparisons. There was a touch of sadness in his voice and eye when he spoke of the spirit of the West.

"These pillars are very fine, very beautiful," he said softly, touching one near the Demosthenes. "It is an excellent work—and all so new and sparkling. In India, also, we have pillars in the temples, only they are much more massive and hoary with age."

Some one suggested the possibility that the pillars he was admiring were not genuine marble, explaining the prevalence of a very excellent substitute for the real stone in some New York buildings; but this the polite Oriental smilingly waved aside.

"You are putting up fine buildings in this country, and there is great wealth and what you call progress," he said. "You are proud of all this, enthusiastic even, and consider that in your civilization you have reached the pinnacle of the ages. But—it is all so new and sparkling, like these pillars here! Wait until years have passed over them and they become hoary like those in the great temple of Madura; then will there be wisdom among you and a venerable history from which to judge of progress. America is so young, Europe also, it is no wonder you are proud and so certain that you are on the right road.

"How far back does India go? Dear! dear! Millions of years. Westerners have their fads about us, and, as their chronology goes back no further than forty centuries before Christ, they are naturally chary of giving an older ancestry to another race. But among the savants of Europe and America the antiquity of Indian civilization is beginning to be recognized. In our books there are historical incidents described that took place thousands of centuries ago. Furthermore, it is of importance to remember that we are in possession now of the very same ideals and practices which were common to us centuries before the era of Babylon and other ancient cities. From the height of this great age India is able to gauge, with something of the eye of experience, the new countries and races that rise and fall around her.

"What do we see? Possibly much that a newer race does not, can not, see. It is the past that gives a proper perspective, a right angle of vision; and, having that, we Hindus are not so carried away by the enthusiasms of the moment when we view this period of development and material prosperity through which Western civilization is passing. Material grandeur is all very well, but the Hindu is accustomed to look for something beneath it that is more enduring and real before concluding that a nation is on a right or wrong path.

"Our own evolution, you know, has been largely on the spiritual plane. We live for another country, the country that is invisible—the country known in the Sanserit and Pali languages as Nirvana. We are spiritual, I say, in our tendencies, and just now we are suffering from the materialism that is flowing into our households and corrupting our youth as a result of the Western civilization that is coming into contact with our own. There is much that this Western civilization has taught us, but at its root it is materialistic, and for that we protest and strive against it, just as your own cultured men protested against it.

"As for your vaunted self-government by the multitude, you cannot say it has achieved eminent success, can you? I can find nothing admirable about it. It seems more like a political cry than a real achievement. An enlightened Government can come only from enlightened men ruling the unenlightened masses, an oligarchy of cultured intellect, if you will. In the body politic it is the head, or spirit of light and love, that must rule, not, as too often happens in the case of popular Governments, the feet, or selfishness. That is one of the sparkling pillars in your temple that time may prove to be—not made of marble!

"You point with pride to your buildings, your prosperity, your achievements in science. Similar heights were attained through civil laws or by tinkering State Constitutions, or by an increase of industrial occupations. That Americans believe it can come in this way merely emphasizes the hope of those who do not know the true methods of converting self-love and neighborly love and charity or perfect love on social and political movements. Instead of wasting so much time, however, on altruistic movements, that in other forms appear as Socialism and Nihilism, society would be far more benefited if a greater degree of attention were paid to the inner improvement of the individual. Concerted action for social ends will be far more effective if the units, the individuals, composing it are first perfected. This is the old Hindu belief, and it has been brought to you by your own religious teacher, Jesus Christ. Ah, yes! Americans are past masters in the art of concerted action, in organization; but how futile your efforts, what waste of legislation when, as individuals you ignore the mandates of your own religion and neglect to look within and cleanse your own souls!

"It is this lack of the spiritual leaven in your civilization that impresses traveler from the East more keenly than the multiplication and largeness of cities and industrial objects. In India the care of the needy and the sick everywhere practiced, not through organized effect, but through an impulse is universally felt and obeyed by individuals. Here the beggar is not invited to your table. With us he is. Our religion teaches us that he is a brother and we treat him accordingly. In treating him thus the rich are benefited as much as the poor. The ordinary charity, the charity of the West, mere money-giving, is no cure for worldliness, no balm for suffering. When the rich man, instead of giving his check for a hundred dollars to some charitable society, goes out among the needy and gives himself, as he has been commanded to do by God, he will give more in spirit, in light and love; with these he will enrich himself as well as those whom he serves. This truth is contained in all religions, but the spirit of our Eastern civilization labors for the development of this leaven of spirituality, tries to escape by hard work and harder reflection, and thus to an escape from sensuousness and intellectual arrogance into the peaceful region of light and love.

MR. RAMA NATHAN
Solicitor General of Ceylon.

"The coming of the Western nations, however, into our country, is changing India. They bring with them their selfish mercantile principles, their worship of manners and wealth, and, as a consequence, the religious simplicity and the beautiful devotion to God and neighbor that prevailed among us is fast disappearing. It is the wedge of selfishness and sensuousness that, entering in our midst, will destroy us if we do not take care. This downward tendency is to-day throughout the world.

"You Americans and Europeans are firm in the belief that you are in an era of progress, of advancement. We do not think so in India, and it is your triumphant materialism that confirms us in our belief of the contrary. You see, we judge history by centuries, you by years. Undoubtedly the decades in which we are at this moment living are an advance on the decades that immediately preceded them. But the course of the age of sensuousness is like the river that broadens and then loses itself in the arid desert for want of depth. This age, or 'yuga,' in which we are living is broadening with many a flash, but the eternal springs of spirituality are not feeding it. There is no depth in Western civilization. The shaking off of the barbarism of the Middle Ages in Europe, the blossoming forth of the Renaissance, and the general reform of modern times due to invention and discovery is well and good, but humanity is plunging more and more into sensuousness. Spiritually considered, the age is at low ebb. Another yuka will commence whose tendency will be all upward, if American civilization is to do real good to the teeming millions who have taken refuge in it.

"Ages are measured by thousands of centuries; a period of darkness is followed by a period of light when man retraces his steps up the mountain of life. In the dark yuga, or age, that is upon us now, and that has 132,000 years to run, according to our sacred writers, all that can be done is to work individually to escape from the impending ruin of the spirit. National regeneration may be impossible until the fated course of the age is run, but among all races there are small groups of individuals believing in the universal religion of love and light, and it is to increase their number that the spiritual teacher must direct himself."

Mr. Rama Nathan has been widely quoted in the newspapers as having come to this country for the purpose of bringing about a unification of religions. As a Hindu he declares that proselytizing is foreign to his mission, while this specific intention he disclaims, pointing out that the Parliament of Religions that had this in view failed in its endeavor.

"Since all religions at bottom teach love and light as the means to reach God," he declared, "one religionist should not tear the hair of another or be too proud of his own beliefs, but should rather practice a thoroughly sincere tolerance. As for unity of belief, that is impossible. What wonder that the Parliament of Religions, consisting of an army of speakers from every part of the world, each holding his own theories, was ineffective, when we know that the 300 Bishops who assembled at Nicea under the orders of an Emperor to harmonize the one creed of Christianity some three centuries after Christ failed to produce a harmony that was effective upon the votaries of that religion!

"My purpose in coming to this country is simply to answer the invitations of certain kind friends and learned societies here, not to make proselytes. These friends and societies have expressed a desire to hear from me on the great problems of civilization, and after I have been with them for a few months I expect to return to my home in Ceylon, after a visit to China and Japan. I do not expect to give lectures while in New York, as I am averse to that form of teaching."

On Mr. Ramanathan's return to Ceylon he expects to devote himself to educational efforts whose aim will be the preserving of the national life of India that is threatened seriously, he believes, by the influx of the materialism and sensualism of the West. To this end he expects to open a college for the higher education of the youth of his own land.

"The knowledge of their own past and their own philosophy," he declares, "will help more than anything else can to familiarize our youth with their true national ideals, stemming the current of irreligion and irreverence for the things of the spirit and leading automatically to the national regeneration. It will be my endeavor to interest my countrymen toward the establishment of a college having this as its purpose, where a thoroughly sound education in every respect will be combined with an adequate study of our own literature and the philosophy stored up in our ancient books."

WHEN KUROPATKIN WAS SHOT.

At this time of the (at least technical) disgrace of Gen. Kuropatkin, it falls distinctly apropos to hear of that brave and able gentleman's behavior during another war than that which has but just come to an end in the Far East—during the war between Russia and Turkey in the late seventies when Kuropatkin served with marked distinction under the redoubtable Skobeleff. Through all of 1877 the younger man displayed most admirable fighting qualities. His tirelessness and ability had gained for him the highest encomiums of his famous superior. Then, on Christmas Day, came the chance shot which laid Kuropatkin by for a time, incidentally showing in a new light the splendid physical bravery of the man.

Skobeleff had taken his stand on a rock to survey the valley which stretched away from the Lyssol Hill, when a ball from a Turkish sharpshooter, hidden among the brush below, pierced Kuropatkin's shoulder and collarbone; as usual, he was at the side of his commander. The loss to the latter seemed irremediable, while the grief of the file troops, when the ill news ran among them, was so keen and real that some actually shed tears as this idolized leader was laid on a stretcher and borne away.

But the rugged steepness of the rocky hillside was too much for the bearers. One of them slipped, and the wounded man was rudely jerked out upon the ground. "I'll go on foot. It's impossible to be carried!" he muttered, his face convulsed with pain. An orderly took him by the arm and started to lead him up the slope, when he, too, slipped and went down, the officer falling on him. Then a rope was tied about Kuropatkin's waist, the ends being passed over the shoulders of a brawny Cossack, while two soldiers, one on each side, supported the General—whose military career was thus ended for a time.

A SEA SPELL.

The sunset sea—a goblet thick inlaid
With jewels wrought in golden filigree,
An opal from some elfin treasury
Burning with fire and flashing every shade!
While round the dim horizon, wide displayed
The clouds pile up their largess tenderly
As if to clothe the beauty of the sea
In filmy gossamer and soft brocade.

And far away I think I almost hear
A horn's faint echo thro' the dusk-hour's veil
As in the happy, golden days of yore—
Mayhap, e'en now upon this magic mere Frail shallops will flit by and mermaids pale
Will lure us back to fairyland once more.

THOMAS S. JONES, JR.

LAST OF AN OLD WEST SIDE LANDMARK

A HOUSE that has survived the human tide of Manhattan for 146 years compels one's attention, refines to essence many memories of the past, and so reveals by contrast the greatness or the littleness of the present.

Such a house is making its last grim stand on the brink of excavations that are being made even at its doorstep, at the corner of Seventy-ninth Street and Broadway.

It was built in 1759 as a Summer residence by Gov. Vandenhoover of Demerara, Guiana, where with his family he could take refuge from the yellow fever outbreaks in the Summer.

As was the custom in those far-off days, when Broadway was the old Bloomingdale Road, these country residences faced the Hudson.

It must have been an enviable location at that time, because the estate on which the house stood covered 400 acres, and the lawns sloped down from what was then its front door (on West End Avenue) to the river's edge.

It is a stone house, and had a sloping Dutch roof, with small dormitory windows, and above these the treasure place of all such houses, a big, roomy garret, in which old records and precious mementos were consigned to the dust of ages.

Adjoining it was the Apthorp place. The house, after many degrees of honor and disgrace heaped upon it by the various moods and mishaps of men, about twenty years ago became the property of William Waldorf Astor, who is about to put up a hotel twenty-three stories high on the site.

The building of a new hotel in this city of skyscrapers is not unusual, but in this instance there is attached to the transaction the sentiment of family relationship, for John Jacob Astor, the founder of the Astor fortunes, was related by marriage to Gov. Vandenhoover's family. For this reason, perhaps, when the last lessee of the house, David Clarke, the florist, moved out, a watchman has been on the door night and day to keep any one from entering the premises, and because the old doors and wainscoting, the stairs, the banisters, the mantels, even the hinges of the oak doors are to be treasured as antiques by the Astors.

When George Washington, pursued by the British in command of Lord Cornwallis, was in retreat, he established temporary headquarters here. The house was deserted and vacant at that time. Washington remained here only twenty-four hours, barely escaping the advance guard of Lord Cornwallis, with whom the Americans had a skirmish. Shortly after this it became the headquarters of the English, being occupied by Cornwallis.

The incident of Gen. Washington's brief stay has been verified in the history of the First Baptist Church, located at that time on Broome Street, but strangely occupying at present the corner opposite this house. The pastor of this church at that time was the Chaplain of Gen. Washington's staff, and his horse was shot under him in the attack made by the British advance guard on the Americans.

There is also an unauthenticated story that Gen. Howe of the English forces died here.

The house began its career as a mansion, a residence of no less grandeur than George Washington's home at Mount Vernon. When the fight for liberty among the colonists turned these peaceful shores of the Hudson into a battlefield, it suffered the scars of the times.

It became Burnham's celebrated roadhouse, and in 1885 it had deteriorated to one of those dark and mysterious resorts where prizefights, cockfights, and all kinds of illegal practices were followed.

Its aristocratic glory had gone, its refinement had been violated, the old house had fallen into the disrepute of an infamous beer garden.

At this time it was purchased by Waldorf Astor, and he promptly ejected the beer-garden tenants, and so restored in a measure the respectability of its weather-beaten ancestry.

The Clarkes leased the house from Mr. Astor, and moved in twenty years ago.

"Before the previous tenants left," said Mr. David Clarke, "they destroyed all they could, out of revenge. The house was in a very dilapidated condition inside. Windows were smashed, floors damaged, and every depredation possible within the four walls was accomplished. The old sloping Dutch roof was burned off and a square one replaced it. My mother remembers very well what it looked like before this happened. The stairs are still intact as they were originally built, and the banisters, but the Astors have removed the most interesting relics. It must have been a tavern prior to 1809, for I found bills and paper in the garret with that date that showed the purchase of such supplies."

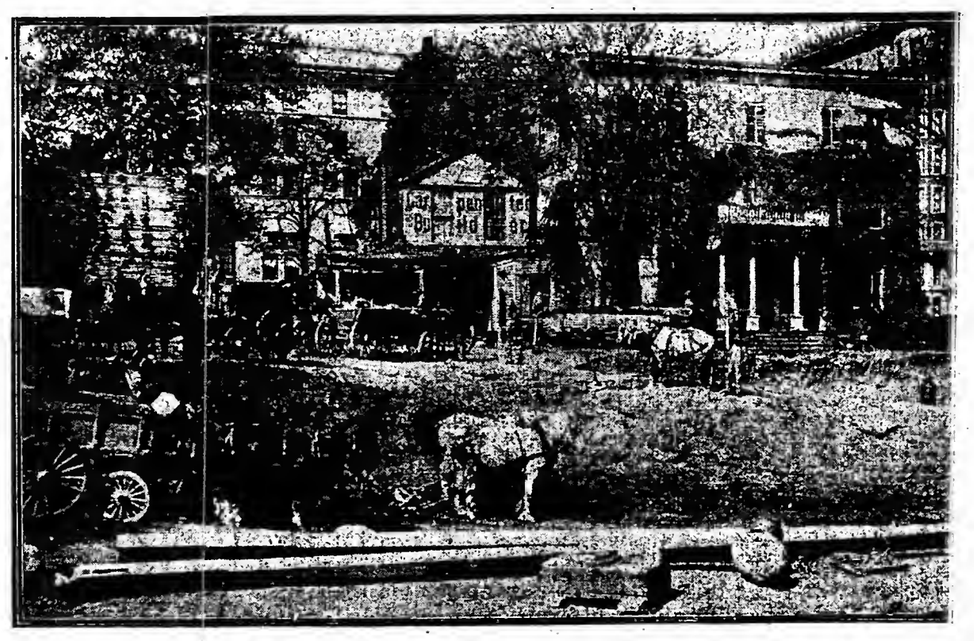
William Hamilton, a brother of Alexander Hamilton, married one of Gov. Vandenhoover's daughters, and lived in old mansion in the early days of dig and style.

Its neighbors, the Apthorps, interried also with the Governor's family terweaving the landed interests of adjoining properties.

Mr. Clarke still has an old-fashi massive sideboard, with clawed feet, may have held the punch bowl of Colonial days when the Hamilton fa celebrated or when Gen. Howe, who said died there, said his farewells.

"Twenty years ago that house ar surrounding property sold for $100, said a neighboring merchant. "A later an offer of a million and a hal made for it."

Exactly when it turned its back the river; that is, how long ago the door was puffed into the greater in tance of being the front door by add porch, when the old Dutch roof burned and the new one added, the subtleties of its changes in character appearance is not definitely known, is about to pass into the rubbish he obliterated glories.



Vandenhoover House, 146 Years Old, at Broadway and Seventy-ninth Street, Which Will Be Torn D vn This Week to Make Way for a Skyscraper Apartment House.

It is to be torn down this week. This retreat of a sentiment that we are not adding one whit to to-day may be regretted. If so, there is in the picture of this house, in these its last few days, reflection for those who are not in sympathy with the ostentatious rapid strides of commerce, rapid only to those who esteem honors that were once of a different standard than they are to-day.

It stands erect and stolid, without outward adornments of façade, no filigree of carvings, no steel frame on which so much that is false looks like marble, so much that is cheap looks rich.

It stands, a monument to the staid and contented, a defiance to the transient and the seemingly real.

A workman digging in the excavations discovered an English penny dated 1762, and sixpence and shillings are being found quite frequently. This interests the men who are tearing this place down more than its history, a memory of the people who lived in it.

Its obituary will read merely:

"Built, 1759; forgotten, 1905."

DEBT'S COUNTER-IRRITANT.

THIS little story has to do with one of the best known scholars in the country, a student and a traveler versed authoritatively in all matters Oriental, but a man of such poor business judgment withal that it is not yet a year since practically all his investments fell through, leaving only his pen and his learning between him and the wolf at the door. It is this fact which explains at least a part of his opinions of the little Japs.

He calls them "the sepia-colored Yankees of the East," and then goes on: "They are much more than merely particularly efficient cogs in a splendid and artistic piece of national machinery. They are human, as they are nothing else. They enjoy and suffer, love and hate quite as well and as truly as they fashion diminutive gardens or carve ivories or mold cloisonnés. Why the Japanese is a born Bohemian, once you come to know him thoroughly, and just as artistic in that, too, as he is human. It is 'sake' that he drinks, a fierce distillation from the rice plant, and if that does not tell you enough of it listen to what a certain Tokio friend of mine has written in its praise:

When you drink sake
You feel like the Springtime,
And the loud voices of impatient creditors
On the outside
Sound like the voices of nightingales
Singing most sweetly.

"If that isn't desirably human," concluded the speaker, with all the emphasis of deep feeling, "I'd like to know what is."

Magyar Revolution Believed to be Near

Hungary, Inspired by the Traditions of '49, Seeks to Repudiate Her Partnership in the Dual Monarchy---Francis Joseph's Elbow Jogged from Berlin.

HALF a century ago the sympathetic civilized world gazed with tearful eyes upon the brutalities committed by a wrathful monarch on a subdued but not conquered band of brave patriots who fought for the freedom of Hungary. Their arms may have been destroyed, their military organizations scattered, their homes plundered, but the spirit that prompted them to resist oppression has not been touched. The torch of liberty kindled by the immortal fathers then has been kept burning by the sons of to-day, and as the war clouds are gathering over that country, so deeply immersed in the blood of its legion of martyrs, the air is charged with the same stirring air that brightly illuminates in every Hungarian heart the sign of "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity!"

These were the magic words that started the fires of revolt in 1848. Ferdinand V. was then Emperor of Austria. For years the Hungarians had felt his oppression. Through the influence of the Archduchess Sophia, mother of the present Emperor, almost every article of the Hungarian constitution, of a thousand years' standing, had been intentionally ignored, and the Magyars forced to part with their national traditions and customs. These wrongs led to the brave stand taken in Parliament by the illustrious young hero, Louis Kossuth, who caused a delegation to embark on a steamship bound for Vienna, to present to the Emperor of Austria a document entitled, "What the Hungarian Nation Desires."

Ferdinand V. promptly granted every one of the twelve demands made in this petition and with equal promptness broke them. Then came a most unexpected blow. The Wallachians were incited to rise in a body and by firing their houses, kill and maim thousands of innocent defenceless men, women, and children. The cause of this uprising was set down by the patriots to that unknown, intriguing band of the Austrians, the Camarilla, a band of unprincipled, cowardly men who have ever since been the direct underlying cause of all dastardly outrages committed in the Empire and whose identity has never been disclosed even to the present day. The Hungarians demanded soldiers of the Emperor for the defense of their homes; soldiers did not come. Kossuth called to the Hungarians to arm themselves and thus repel the Wallachian invasion. This was regarded as a revolutionary act by Austria and Ban Jelachich was sent with a great Austrian army against the Hungarian insurgents, attacking their country from the South. This was the final blow to the much grieved patriots.

On March 18, 1848, the famous poem "Talpra Magyar," or "To your feet, Hungarians," was recited before the walls of the National Museum by the famous poet Saudor Petoefi. With burning hearts the patriots crossed to Buda and freed the political prisoners from jail and the revolution was on.

Then followed two years of struggle, marked by the most brilliant victories on the part of the Hungarians. The battles of Moor, Brandyiszka and Buda stand in history among the greatest of struggles and achievements. With his armies discouraged and decimated, Francis Joseph, made Emperor through Ferdinand's forced abdication, appealed to Russia for help, and the tide was turned against the patriots, Goergey laid down his arms at Vilagos, needlessly surrendering to Gen. Paskievitch, a deed which earned him the title of "traitor." Kossuth fled to Turkey, where he was received with open arms. England invited and feted him, and the United States sent a man of war for him to visit this land of liberty. Every one is familiar with the honors conferred on this great patriot here in 1852. He was the only foreigner who was ever allowed to make an address in the House of Representatives. He was allowed to issue a "Hungarian Fund" currency, and with this and other help pouring in the slaughtering hand of Austria was stayed, but only after the flower of the Hungarian warrior was completely annihilated by wholesale murder on the part of the cruel officials.

Years of suffering followed; to mention the name Hungarian was a crime in Austria. Then, like a Nemesis, came the Austro-Prussian war. The Austrian Army was crushed at Koenigratz in 1867, and the faithful aid of the Hungarians was needed in the hours of trial, and the "settlement" of 1867 resulted, through which Emperor Francis Joseph was crowned with the St. Stephan crown and was acknowledged King of Hungary.

He took the oath to uphold the Constitution, whereby Hungary received its long cherished desire, the rights denied them before—free press, self-government, suffrage, representation, national guards, &c.

But now to-day the leaders in Hungary, standing united, forgetting factional and party differences, again find themselves presenting "What Hungary desires" to the King, and history is repeating itself.

So much for the ultra-Magyar spirit whose patriotic cravings were checked in 1849, and deluded eighteen years later. The attitude of Hungary toward her partner in the Dual Monarchy is to-day the logical outcome of a state of unsatisfied aspirations, of coerced and humiliated national life, which the Ausgleich of 1867 has rather served to augment than to improve and tranquilize. A glance at the cable dispatches, whether from Vienna or Budapest, revealing disorderly scenes among the Magyars, defiance to their pleadings, or threats flung to them by the Austrian press, or the notorious inability of Francis Joseph to fill the dual capacity of Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, seem to indicate that the Magyar kingdom is on the point of forcibly severing the bonds of allegiance, that revolution is, indeed, ready to repeat its grim deeds of the middle of the last century the moment the propitious hour arrives.

This is a mistake. Hungary is already in revolution. For two years she has not contributed her financial quota to the support of the Dual Monarchy; for the last eighteen months she has furnished no recruits for the imperial army of Austria-Hungary. At the same time she has, during the period in question, been augmenting her means of national defense, not so much in view of the impending crisis in her relationship with Austria as to defend herself against the absorption of her German and Polish population by Germany, who is ready to take a hand in the partition of the Dual Monarchy the instant his venerable Royal Imperial Majesty shall pass away.

The disorders in the Hungarian Parliament last Spring, followed by the general election, brought the crisis to its present head. The continued interference of the Austrian advisers of the aged monarch in the national affairs of Hungary at length succeeded in arraying against the Government party in Budapest a Coalition of national groups which constantly obstructed the legislation inspired from Vienna. Count Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, was flattered and misled into committing unconstitutional acts in attempts to overcome this policy of obstruction, and in the interests of tranquillity the Emperor-King was obliged to dissolve Parliament and to order a new election. Through the campaign the struggle betwsen Hungarian Constitutionalism and Austrian absolutism continued, and even when the coalition returned a large majority it did not cease.

According to all precedent, the King should have appointed the Premier from a patriotic Magyar from among the ranks of the Coalition, as their united forces now held the Parliamentary majority. This, however, he has failed to do for two reasons: The Absolutist Party in Hungary points out to him that such an appointment would mean a tacit acceptance of the national aims of Hungary—the imperial stamp of approval on a legislative revolution. Moreover, his Austrian advisers would have him believe that he is justified in ignoring the consequences of the late election and that the Hungarians can be starved into submission, or that, at any rate, the Hungarian National Coalition will drop to pieces through internal dissension, if only the monarch enforce with sufficient firmness the Austrian part of the contract of 1867.

It is, perhaps, unfortunate that the Hungarian leaders have allowed themselves to infringe the spirit of the partnership before they were quite prepared to [illegible] infringes its substance. But, as has been pointed out, the traditions of their former history have been the chief inspiration of the Magyars, who have ignored advice given them from the Bohemian and Croatian leaders. The recent reception given the Coalition leaders in Vienna by Francis Joseph can leave no doubt in their minds that his royal, imperial Majesty is determined to maintain the letter of the contract, whatever its new terms may be or how defined. There is little doubt also that the Emperor-King has been misinformed in regard to the permanency of the Coalition parties or what these leaders stand for: M. Kossuth, Count Apponyi, Baron Banffy, Count Julius Andrassy, and Count Aladar Zichy. What his Majesty practically demanded of them was that they should, as representatives of a vassal State, place themselves in communication with Count Goluchowski, the Imperial Minister of Foreign Affairs. This command was particularly obnoxious, because it was conveyed in the following terms and read out in the German language:

"First—The military questions, in so far as they affect the language of command [illegible] of service, in regard to which any [illegible]ling is and remains absolutely excluded, are to be eliminated from the pro[illegible]nme.

"Second—The bases of the Pragmatic [illegible]n (between Hungary and Austria) re[illegible]n completely untouched both as re[illegible]ls the army and the foreign repre[illegible]atives.

"Third—A revision of the 1867 basis, in [illegible]far as it may concern economic or [illegible]r questions affecting the relationship [illegible]ween Austria and Hungary, cannot [illegible] place one-sidedly between the Crown [illegible] the Hungarian nation, but can only [illegible]effected by means of a compromise, [illegible]ject to royal sanction, between the [illegible] States of the monarchy, with the [illegible]lp of their Governments and of Parlia[illegible]entary deputations appointed ad hoc.

"Fourth—The obligation must be en[illegible]red into that the needs of the State—to [illegible]it, the estimates, the ordinary con[illegible]ngent of recruits, and the commercial [illegible]reaties—shall be voted, and that the [illegible]legations and the quota deputations [illegible]hall be elected.

"Fifth, and Finally—The obligation [illegible]ust be entered into that supply shall be [illegible]oted to cover those military demands of [illegible]which the last delegations sanctioned the [illegible]nstallments for the years 1904 and 1905, [illegible]nd that a Defense bill based on the two [illegible]ears' service system shall be adopted."

Aside from the humiliation which the Magyars must feel if these commands [illegible]e carried out is the additional stigma [illegible]onveyed in the fact that their King, [illegible]award whom there is no question of [illegible]oyalty, has ordered them to go to a Polish Count and consult with him in regard to the national affairs of Hungary and their status in the Constitution of the dual monarchy. They are also conscious of the fact that the elbows of Francis Joseph's advisers are being jogged from the Wilhelmstrasse in Berlin. The Deutsche Kaiser thoroughly realizes that a permanent rupture between the partners of the dual monarchy before the death of Francis Joseph would be a serious blow to his ambition regarding the German population of the disrupted territories.

But even after due weight has been given to the Austrian idea of enforcing and perpetuating an unpopular and obnoxious bond of union, after due consideration has been given the traditions by which Magyar ambitions are inspired, an equitable compromise, while possibly unlikely, seems neither irrational nor radical in the mind of the student of international affairs.

The whole acute, dismal dissension has arisen through the inadequacy of the Hungarian election system, which does not permit the nationalities possessing the greatest populations to have proportionate legislative representation. This fact is alone the root of the revival of national Hungarian aspirations and the determined effort of Austria to make these aspirations subservient to the international policy of the Dual Monarchy, as defined and interpreted in Vienna. Let the cause be removed, and the Coalition which is now augmenting its strength from day to day would soon break up into factions before the cries of "Pfui Koition!" and Austria and Hungary once more united through common international needs and aspirations might present a stern and commanding front toward the West which has been eagerly awaiting their national, racial, and religious disintegration and abasement.

CHRONOMETERS.

IN the equipment of United States war vessels for sea service ons of the most essential prerequisites of their safety is the marine chronometers, instruments of peculiar construction and great perfection of workmanship, by which time is measured with extreme accuracy, as in determining geographical longitudes and ascertaining the difference of time.

One of the most essential and practical features of the United States Naval Observatory as a naval station is the custody of those delicate instruments, which are thoroughly tested before active service, a work that requires much care and attention, from three to six months in a year.

There is connected with the chronometer room at the Observatory a temperature room in which the testings or trials are made, and where the influence of the hygrometric conditions of the atmosphere upon the running of chronometers is noted. The room is heated by circulation of hot water, the fuel being gas controlled by electricity, and is cooled by an ice refrigerator when a temperature is required below that of the outside atmosphere. The temperature is closely observed each day during trial, and recorded for the previous twenty-four hours by a chronometric thermometer and by self-registering maximum and minimum thermometers.

The chronometers are compared daily between 11 and 11:40 o'clock A. M. with the mean time standard clock, and the errors and rates are worked up every seventh day, and from these mean rates calculations are made to the nearest quarter of a second. All chronometers received at the Observatory are placed on trial prior to their purchase by the Government, and are tested at the temperatures between 45 degrees and 90 degrees Fahrenheit. Fifty-five, seventy, and eighty-five degrees are good temperatures to use, as between these extremes are included all the temperatures through which chronometers will pass in ordinary navigation.

The principal American makers of chronometers submit their instruments for "Uncle Sam's" hygrometric test. The instruments are placed on trial by their numbers, and those failing to pass are returned to their makers. The trials are commenced near the middle of the Summer or the middle of the Winter in each year, so that the natural temperature of both extremes can be used as well as artificial ones.

Chronometers are selected with a view to the temperature in which they are to be used. Those for warm climates should have their point compensation highest, and those for cold climates the reverse.

When called for, they are taken direct from the Observatory, through the Navy Department, to their destination while still running with the greatest care. They are delivered to the navigation officer of the navy yard or of the vessel, as the case may be, when the supervision of the Observatory ceases until their return.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR THE NEW INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART

WHEN the handsomely endowed Institute of Musical Art in this city opens its doors on Wednesday of this week for its first session, it will do so with an enrollment of students far beyond the expectations of those in charge. Applications have poured in, swamping the executive force, from the director, Frank Damrosch, down. Musical people from all parts of the country, and even speaking many languages, have been admitted. The building, the house at Twelfth Street and Fifth Avenue that James Lenox occupied and made a literary and social centre, and which later the Presbyterian Missions Board occupied, now teems with music.

The influence that the presence of such a school in such a neighborhood will have has been much commented on. The house is one of the few great landmarks of that once wholly aristocratic lower Fifth Avenue section now being so rapidly taken up by trade. As the building is owned by Thomas F. Ryan, whose home is opposite, it may be expected to remain as it is for a long time. The institute has leased it from Mr. Ryan for a term of years. It was in this building that Mr. Lenox kept his books, the ones which later he gave to form the Lenox Library.

As for the school itself, this building is proving one of its greatest attractions. The rooms are spacious and the ceilings extremely high. The entire house has been renovated. Not only are there rooms for teaching that could not be better adapted for the purpose were they constructed for it alone, but there are a magnificent private concert hall, an entrance splendidly large, a cozy, old-fashioned sun parlor in the rear, and a large suite for the use of the library, which will be catalogued and installed within the year. The large circulating library which the Schirmers have conducted for over thirty years has been given to the Institute, and will continue to be a general circulating library. The reference library will have as a starting nucleus close upon 2,000 volumes of works on music and musicians, and the scores of operas, oratorios, symphonies, and the like, and will be held for the use of the student and Faculty.

It is in the personnel of the instructing force that the Institute is particularly strong. The aim has been to secure the best teachers, no matter from where it was necessary to bring them. In order that this could be done the Institute had to have large endowment funds. The mainstay, of course, is the $500,000 which James Loeb gave in memory of his mother, but besides this there is a guarantee fund of some thousands of dollars yearly, and with these two great aids the Institute's Directors feel that it should accomplish fully its aim to be non-commercial.

Mr. Damrosch, the director, brings to the school the wide experience of years of instruction in music. His position as head of the department of music in the public schools of Manhattan and the Bronx he has just given up, after holding it for eight years.

In the department of voice culture the teachers are, among others, Mme. Etelka Gerster, Mme. Hess-Burr, Georg Henschel, and Alfred Giraudet; in pianoforte, Sigismund Stojowski; in theory and composition, Percy Goetschius and Louis Victor Saar.

Georg Henschel arrived here on the Majestic Wednesday. Mr. Henschel has often been in the United States and has with his wife given many recitals here. He will teach at the Institute of Musical Art exclusively. Mlle. Madeline Walther, who will assist Mme. Etelka Gerster in voice culture instruction, arrived in New York Tuesday. She is a native of Havre, her mother being French and her father German. She was a concert singer with success, and then began to teach. For some years she has been aiding Mme. Gerster at the latter's school in Berlin.

The school for orchestra players has attracted much attention. In this, the teaching will be done by first instrument players of the New York Symphony Orchestra. A number of them, including George Barrère, the noted flute player, came here recently from France, Belgium, and other European countries. Besides Barrère, among the men instructors in the orchestra school are Adolphe Dubois, trumpet; Cesare Addimando, oboe; Léon Leroy, clarinet; Hermann Hand, horn; Auguste Mesnard, bassoon, and A. Tilken, trombone.

Not only are there so many teachers from abroad, but even fr[illegible] such a musi[illegible]cal centre as Boston the [illegible]st have come for the new school. The [illegible]eisel quartet, composed of Franz Knei[illegible], first violin; J. Theodorowicz, secon[illegible]violin; Louis Svecenski, viola, and A[illegible]n Schroeder, violoncello, will give the [illegible]ssons at the Institute on their respec[illegible]stringed in-struments. The member[illegible]f the quartet will make their home in [illegible]s city.

"The Servant Question"---Another Effort to Solve It

Fall Experiences in the New and Old "Meccas" of Servant Hunters, and the Reason the General Houseworker is Almost Extinct---Taken from Life.

LET President Roosevelt, who so bravely and decidedly faces the "race suicide" question, weigh on the other side of the scales the "servant girl problem," and it will make interesting reading. It is scarcely possible, however, for any "mere man" fully to understand and appreciate the various causes that have led to the present conditions. Nevertheless, one thing is certain—either parents in moderate circumstances must limit the size of their families to two, or at the most three children, disregarding Roosevelt's advice, or else the mother must do her own housework. It is no longer possible to secure a maid for general housework if there are more than five in the family, and four have the choice—at from $20 to $25 a month for a competent one.

Mrs. B. determined not long ago to investigate the causes leading to the scarcity of servants, the high wages demanded, and the extermination of the old-time "general houseworker," and obtained some startling results.

She had heard that there were numberless immigrants to be found in the mission houses in the vicinity of Castle Garden, where benevolent clergymen took charge of the simple country girls who came in on the ships from the other side and kept them from straying into the tempting paths of vice so alluringly open to them in this land of the free. She understood that all one had to do to secure a good Swedish girl, at $10 a month, who, of course, could speak no English, but would be a fine laundress and fair cook, was to call on the Rev. Mr. Petersen—the Swedish clergyman in charge of their mission—and she could pick out any that seemed desirable, if she furnished satisfactory references that the girl was wanted for no illegal purpose. Then Mrs. B. also heard joyfully, from this same friend, that the Rev. Mr. Petersen was waiting, with open arms, eager to find resting places for his innocent flock of immigrants, and thus make way for another shipload to be left at his hospitable doors.

What an admirable solution of the "servant girl problem"! What a haven of refuge for distraught housekeepers who much of the time had been paying $20 a month for girls not far from green!

And what matter whether they spoke any English? The Rev. Mr. Petersen furnished all customers with a little book, in which all phrases commonly used in domestic service were given in both English and Swedish. All one had to do was to point to the Swedish words opposite the English meaning, and presto! the girl flew with neatness (Swedes are proverbially neat) and dispatch to execute one's wishes, and housekeeping became a paradise, and a "bargain day" paradise at, that! Furthermore, no words of impertinence were given in this Swedish manual, consequently no "back talk" need be expected or dreaded.

This kind friend also told Mrs. B. that by the time the girl had learned something of the language and gotten on to the ways of the pert New York domestic Winter had flown, Summer had come again, and she let the bird out of its cage, while she quit housekeeping for the seashore till the next Fall! In this way she had managed to solve the question of the day, clever woman that she was!

Now, whether she had been "jollying" Mrs. B. or had some deadly hold on the Rev. Mr. Petersen Mrs. B. will never know—but let the story tell itself!

Mrs. B. sallied forth bravely one brisk morning last week to rescue one of the unfortunate Swedes and incidentally to help unload the house of the Rev. Mr. Petersen. She found the house without trouble—everything, she fancied, was now coming her way—opposite Battery Park, and smilingly entered. Two women accompanied by an Episcopal clergyman followed at her heels. She looked expectantly for the bunch of girls she knew should be sitting around. No one in sight but two men—one on either side—writing at tables behind a railing. Suddenly a tall, frock-coated individual with gray hair and whiskers popped out through a door in the rear. Ah! there was the door leading to the roomful of girls! This must be the Rev. Mr. Petersen! A beaming smile from Mrs. B., the two other women, and the Episcopal clergyman! Then from the former, very sweetly: "Is this the Rev. Mr. Petersen?" "Yes," gruffly. "What do you want?"

"Why, we came to take one of your Swedish girls to a good home, where there are only four in family—"

"No girls here!" this from the supposed shepherd of the flock.

"No girls?" in astounded tones from Mrs. B., the two other women, and the Episcopal clergyman. "But we heard you had a lot of girls!"

"Well, I haven't any, haven't had any, and don't expect any!"

Mrs. B., shamefaced, left the room, followed by the two other women and the Episcopal clergyman.

As she faced about in a bewildered manner, not knowing which way to turn, her eye fell upon a large house next door, on which was a sign: "Home for Immigrant Girls." The star of hope again shone brightly, and she ran gayly up the steps, followed by the two other women and the Episcopal clergyman.

At the ring of the bell, a sad, weary-looking woman in black came to the door. Before any one spoke, she said:

"No, we have no girls here. This bell is rung over a hundred times a day by people looking for girls, and we never have any!" This in a tone of resignation and patience that struck a chill to their hearts. Mrs. B. slowly but firmly closed the door, and they went quietly and resignedly down the broad stoop, and gazed wonderingly on the sign: "Home for Immigrant Girls," feeling like Alice in "Wonderland."

There was a "German Lutheran Mission House," two doors further on, and Mrs. B. screwed up her courage and entered, still followed by her unknown friends, who seemed to feel that there was safety in numbers. The house was a new six-story, yellow-brick affair, with lace curtains at all the windows and an imposing-looking office on the first floor filled with men in various official positions.

"Now I know what you have come for," snapped a black-haired individual with a clerical coat. "You want a girl, and you are the twenty-sixth person who has been in here this morning looking for one, and it is only 11 o'clock. We haven't any girls."

"But what do you have this big six story building for?" timidly ventured Mrs. B.

"That is something I will not discuss," this firmly and with a snapping of the black eyes.

Her courage fast oozing out, Mrs. B. turned toward the door. She fairly ran down the stoop and across Battery Park before she gathered herself together and found that she had lost her former companions, and also found that she was directly facing the "Government Immigrant Bureau." Fresh hope sprang up in her breast. Here she would at least receive courteous treatment. She inquired for the matron, and was told by her that there were no girls—nothing but men and boys and old women. Nearly all the girls who came over had places before they left the other side, which were secured for them by friends or relatives here.

As Mrs. B., her spirit broken, walked back past the scenes of her former encounters, she saw the Roman Catholic Mission Home, with a large cross over the door. This she had missed on her former rounds, and she doubtless would find some Irish girls in this place. As she walked up the stoop she saw stuck in the glass of the door a white card, bearing this legend in large black letters: "We have no girls here to-day." Here at least was sense and discipline displayed. No useless waste of time spent in running to the door here.

Weary and footsore Mrs. B. wended her way homeward, leaving unsolved the problem of the uses of the large houses and the missionary clergymen opposite Castle Garden, determining to spend the next day in the legitimate field of servant hunters—the intelligence office. No more chasing of the elusive ten-dollar green Swede!

The following morning found her bright and early at the doors of the large and handsome offices, fitted up by a number of philanthropic women for the simplifying of this vexed "servant problem."

The young woman in charge was charming and gracious to a degree, offered all the assistance in her power to the searcher after truth, and herself chatted at some length as to the causes of the present state of affairs.

"Now, in the first place," she remarked, "there is something to be said on both sides. Of course the women feel that they are the injured ones, when in more cases than you would imagine they themselves are to blame. For instance, a woman engages a maid and tells her she will have certain duties to perform; then, when the girl appears, she, little by little, adds to the duties already spoken of, and the girl is dissatisfied at once. If women would only tell a girl the truth before they engaged her, a whole lot of trouble would be avoided. That is one reason a man has so much less trouble than a woman with those in his employ. He is not nearly so exacting, and knows what he wants and sticks to it.

"Another frequent complaint that we have from our servants here is that they receive their wages in driblets. $2 or $3 a week, perhaps, until the employer finally owes them a good sized balance that they often have hard work getting. This is more frequently the case with persons keeping several servants than with the class that can afford only one. We had a case here not long ago of a prominent family who live in a near-by suburb, and whose name you would recognize immediately if I should mention it, for the man is a well-known exhibitor at the Horse Show, and he drives his four-in-hand, while his children indulge in pony carts and other luxuries. His wife came here in the early part of last Winter and told me that she would like three servants, but as she had just come out of a sanitarium, where she had undergone a very serious operation, she was not able to wait and interview the servants, but would leave it to my judgment to select them for her, and she would send me a check for the fee when she returned home.

"We sent her several relays of servants, none of whom stayed more than a short time, coming back with stories of the dreadful quarrels that occurred between husband and wife, the lack of proper food, and the hard time they had to get their money. This, at first, I thought was only servants' gossip, but it finally became so persistent that we sent an agent up to investigate, and found that the man was in debt all over town, was on the verge of bankruptcy, and pretty, and preparing to obtain a divorce from his wife. And yet, knowing this, they had been keeping a houseful of servants all Winter, and trying to make them stay by giving them a dollar or two occasionally—and, by the way, they still owe us the $8 for the original fee.

"Now, another similar instance, but one in which the mistress was entirely blameless, came to me only last week. She also owed her servants—a man and his wife—but to whom she did not know when she came, as her husband's business was in very bad shape, and advised them that she should pay them. This they refused to do, however, they had been with her for a long time, and were very fond of her. But finally, things became so bad that they refused to do another stroke of work unless they received their money. This, at last accounts, they had not received, and they were obliged for their own protection to find another home, but they cried bitterly when they left, and to this day they speak lovingly of their dear missus.

"And so it goes. Good, bad, and indifferent—all kinds, but if we could annihilate all the relations of servants for whom we find places there would be more happiness all around. It is these sisters, and cousins, and aunts that make the girls dissatisfied with their homes and persuade them to try 'green fields and pastures new' when the girls, if left to themselves, wouldn't think of changing. General housework, you say? Now, don't ask me why there are no more general houseworkers. That is something beyond me. Ask the girls themselves."

Just here a tall, raw-boned Irishwoman came in, in a neat black dress and a cone-shaped bonnet that had a rose waving from its highest point.

"Well, Rosie, good morning. Now, why didn't you take that place in Brooklyn that I sent word to you about?"

"Shure, none of Brooklyn fer me, Ma'am! I lived there wanct, but I was very young thin."

So much for the chance of Brooklyn people these days.

Mrs. B. suggested that she go upstairs, where the servants waited, and talk with a few of them as to why the general houseworker was almost extinct. She received permission to do this, and promptly made her way up the wide staircase, to find herself in a maze of girls. There were quite as many maids up there as there were mistresses waiting for them down below. Why couldn't they make connections?

Mrs. B. had to sit there but a few moments to discover the reason. Every little while one of the attendants would come up, stand in the centre of the group, and perhaps call out: "General housework, four in family, $20! Any one here for that?" Two or three nodded their heads.

"Whereabouts is it?" from one.

"Yonkers!" came the reply.

"Not for mine!" could be heard in low tones. "Only a city place for me!"

It was the same with Mount Vernon and other suburbs near New York. Not one in a hundred would go out of the city.

A little later the same woman came up again. "General housework, three in family—$22! All the fine washing sent out! Who will go down and talk to the lady? City place."

One girl finally rose from her chair and went down. She came up again in a very few minutes with a disgusted expression.

"Did you take it?" asked a friend.

"Indeed I didn't. When I got down there I found there were four in family instead of three. I suppose they said three to get me to come down, and thought that when I talked with them they could persuade me to try it. That's the way they'd be piling on things for me to do after I got there that they hadn't told me anything about."

Sniffs of disgust from all in the vicinity.

Finally, after listening to the vain calls for general housework, Mrs. B. said, in desperation, to two girls who were sitting together: "What's the matter that so few girls now will take places for general housework?"

They looked at their questioner pityingly, and one of them said, quickly:

"Why, Ma'am, the general houseworker is looked down on now by the other girls. Every one who is anybody wants to be a waitress. That is the high place that a girl can get in the eyes of the other girls. She is the 'swell' of the crowd. Why, a waitress is ahead of chambermaid and parlormaid—in fact, ahead of everybody. This is the way the girls' ideas of places go: First, a waitress, then parlormaid, chambermaid, cook, laundress, kitchenmaid, dishwasher, and, lower than them all—general houseworker. Why, a general houseworker has hardly any chance to get married, and a waitress has more beaus than she knows what to do with. And yet, really, down in our hearts, most of us would rather do general housework than anything, if it wasn't for the awful name it gives us with the other girls.

"Why, you are a great deal more your own boss than you are in any other position; for, when you are in a house with a lot of other servants, the cook rules the roost. You have to keep giving the cook presents to keep her good-natured, and if she doesn't like you, you might as well get out, for she will lock you out at night, or make it disagreeable for your company, until you just can't stand it. You can't make your cup of tea in the afternoon, as you can when you are the only girl in the house, and you're just under the cook's thumb all the time. I'd love to take a general housework place again"—this in a whisper—"but I wouldn't let any of my friends know I had done it, for I don't want to take any chances on being an old maid."

So the secret is out. The tale is told—and the men are at the bottom of the trouble after all.

MADELEINE KENDRICK VAN PELT.

College Men Rank High in Professional Baseball

SINCE the advent of college graduates into professional baseball the moral standard of our National game has been increased, and the sport to-day is on a higher plane than ever before. Each year finds the ranks of the major baseball leagues augmented by a class of players who bring intelligence, speed, skill, and alertness into all departments of the game. College men have contributed materially in improving the tone of professional ball players as a body, but that was bound to come in a game in which physical and mental fitness is a requisite, and there were plenty of intelligence and self-respect among professional players to furnish fruitful ground for the collegian. A few years ago the announcement of a college baseball player joining the professional ranks was received with a feeling akin to horror by the university bred man, but this has now entirely disappeared, and baseball is looked upon as a commendable profession, where the pay is good and the life suitable to one who enjoys a game requiring expertness in the highest degree.

While many of the collegians enter the baseball field well equipped for their work they learn a good deal more about the game after they get into fast company than they ever learned about it at college, but their aptitude for the game as discovered at college serves them in good stead, and a naturally receptive mind, developed under careful tuition at one of our big collegiate institutions, will more readily grasp the finer points of the game than that of the ball player whose position in life has precluded his chances of college education.

But it is in the excellent morale among the players in general that the college man's influence can be traced. Rowdyism on the diamond is fast disappearing. Spectators are now seldom annoyed with disgraceful scenes and actions on the playing field, which once threatened to destroy the National game, and this condition of affairs is likely to continue and improve as long as the professional baseball ranks are annually augmented by college graduates. They have been taught to control themselves, the refining influence of college life has increased their self-respect, the associations formed in college give them a standing among their club associates, and result in a laudable desire on the part of the latter to emulate the example set them, both on and off the field.

Several college graduates refuse to play Sunday ball. This refusal is not based upon a desire for a day's rest from the long strain of physical training, but a respect for the Sabbath. Two notable examples are David Fultz and Roy Thomas. The former is the crack outfielder of the New York American League team and a graduate of Brown University. Roy Thomas is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. Both object to Sunday playing on principle. A college education is a most useful thing, and any ball player is better off for having it, but in itself it does not increase a player's chance of success, unless it carries with it a natural ability to shine in that particular walk of life. There are two college men who are managers in big leagues as well as players this season. The two are J. Stahl of the Washington American League team, an alumnus of the University of Illinois, and Fred Tenney of the Boston Nationals, a graduate of Brown University.

It is a matter of record that nearly every college player who has entered the professional ranks has risen to the top of the baseball ladder, thereby proving that brains, training, and associations have been important factors in his successes. Whether pitching, fielding, catching, or batting, the college-bred man has invariably risen above his fellows. There are to-day nearly 100 college graduates playing baseball in the big leagues. Not a team in the National and American Leagues is without one or two, and in some clubs as many as four or five of the players were graduated with honors.

Brown University has given to professional baseball not only Tenney and Fultz, but Lynch of Pittsburg, Pattee of Jersey City, and Lauder, formerly with New York and Philadelphia. Christy Mathewson, the crack pitcher of the New York Nationals, is a Bucknell College man. He is the best pitcher in the country to-day and is well up in the batting averages. Devlin of the New York champions comes from Georgetown. Drill, the catcher of the Detroit team; White, the captain pitcher of the Chicago Americans; Isbell of the Chicago American League catcher, and Harley, formerly of the Philadelphia National League team, now with Toronto, were turned out by Georgetown. All occupy prominent positions in their respective places in the season's work. Dolan of Girard College, Dr. Powers of Holy Cross, Henley of Alabama, Plank of Gettysburg, and Coakley of Holy Cross, members of the Philadelphia Athletics, and Manager Mack has never had the slightest trouble with any of them since they have been members of his team. Mack is one of the big league managers who has a firm believer in the college graduate as a desirable element, both in and out of actual playing.

In addition to Roy Thomas of Pennsylvania, Doolin, and Caldwell, the latter also of the University of Pennsylvania, are members of the Philadelphia Nationals. Hugh Jennings, the Baltimore manager, is a Cornell graduate, having taken the law course after he became famous on the diamond. Walter Clarkson, the promising young pitcher of the New York Americans, came from Harvard. "Mike" Murphy, who a few years ago was one of the best shortstops in the National League, joined New York after being graduated from Yale.

Jack Barry of Cincinnati was graduated from the University of Rochester, and Winters, the crack Boston pitcher, was formerly on the Gettysburg College nine. M. Lynch of Pittsburg pitched for Brown before entering the professional ranks, and Lundgren was at one time the star pitcher at the University of Illinois. Chase of the New Yorks is an old Columbia University player, and Lewis of Brooklyn was graduated from Georgetown. There are few better pitchers in the country than Thielman of St. Louis, who gained an enviable reputation while a student at Manhattan College. M. Scanlon of Brooklyn was at one time the best catcher on the University of Pennsylvania nine. Princeton won many battles with Hildebrand in the pitcher's box, and his hand has lost none of its cunning since he joined Pittsburg. Beaumont, who stands fifth on the batting list in the National League, left the college ranks to join President Dreyfuss at Pittsburg. Gibson of the Boston Americans, Reulbach, the Chicago National League pitcher; Cannell of the Boston American, Mullen of Washington, and Overall, the Cincinnati pitcher, are college graduates. This is not the full list of college men playing professional baseball, but it enough to show that there is plenty of college element in the National game.

While the sport has lured many former college stars, the class went into other pursuits after leaving college. One of the best was the noted "Dutch" Carter, Yale, 95. Carter was as proficient a pitcher as ever curved a ball over the plate. "Jack" Greenway, who caught him at Yale, would have made a name for himself if he had joined the professional ranks at the same time helped his fellow graduate's in increasing the respect for baseball player. Club managers and followers of the game unhesitatingly recognize the contributing influence of college graduate on baseball, and as long as the professional ranks are filled from the college nines the standard of the National game will continue to increase both in respect and popularity.

Probable Discovery of an Intra-Mercurial Planet

FROM an examination of certain photographs taken by Prof. Hussey of the Lick Observatory, at the recent total eclipse of the sun, it is probable that a little planet (the long-suspected wanderer between Mercury and the sun) has actually been discovered. If this proves to be the case, then a new world has been added to the stately retinue of planets which circle around the sun. The name Vulcan, long ago assigned to this hypothetical planet, will serve for present reference, pending the name by which it may become known in the future.

Taking it for granted that the planet Vulcan actually exists, it is interesting to note the strange conditions which must prevail on its surface, as compared with our own planet earth. Who knows but that the sun which shines upon it ministers to the needs of countless living beings upon its surface? Yet such beings could not be constituted as we are and endure the enormous supply of light and heat which must undoubtedly be squandered on the neighbor planet to the sun.

Even on Mercury the heat must be intolerable, the sun blazing in the Mercurian skies with a disk four and a half times larger than that which he presents to the observer on earth. What then must be the size of the sun as seen from the new planet which is now believed to circle between Mercury and the sun?

All vegetation must be parched beneath the scorching sun rays, the oceans evaporating as steam. Mortals endowed with eyes like ours would be blinded by the dazzling glare of sunlight, and would welcome with delight the hours of night and darkness. But, alas! on Vulcan the same state of affairs may prevail, regarding night and day, that distinguishes the planets Mercury and Venus from the other planets in the solar system.

For in 1859, Schiaparelli, the great Milanese astronomer, discovered that these planets always keep the same face turned toward the sun, while the opposite side is always turned away from the sun. Consequently, on these two planets, perpetual day must reign supreme on the sunlight side and perpetual night on the other. This may be the case with the planet Vulcan.

Imagine the consternation that would be caused should such a state of affairs exist here! Supposing the Western Hemisphere to be the side ever illumined by the bright day star, then, when weary of the sunlight, we must cross the broad Atlantic to the Eastern Hemisphere in search of the restful darkness of an endless night. Even so, imagine the intense cold which must prevail in a region untouched by the sun's rays, and the scene of desolation that would greet us. The prospect is not inviting whichever way we choose to regard it, but it enables us to realize more fully how peculiarly our own planet is adapted for life as we know it here.

On the other hand, the difference in temperature and climate which must exist on Vulcan as compared with our planet does not of necessity prove that the planet is an unsuitable abode for living creatures. Though every living creature on this earth would at once perish if removed to a planet so near the sun, yet we cannot thence conclude that the planet is uninhabited at present or that in the course of time life may not exist upon its surface.

Though the whole mass of Vulcan may now be heated to a degree a thousandfold more intense than that of the fiercest heat we know of, yet in ages to come, when the heat of the sun itself has decreased, as it undoubtedly will, and Vulcan will have correspondingly cooled off, then life may become possible upon its surface. At that remote period the earth will probably be at its last gasp and on the verge of extinction.

We can then imagine a Vulcanian professor of astronomy turning his telescope in the direction of our planet and calling the attention of his pupils to the fact that the earth has become a burned-out cinder like the moon, but may once have been the abode of life, judging from the life history of their own planet. He might also add that the same fate that has befallen the earth must at some time overtake the planet Vulcan, for in the ordinary course of events it, too, must eventually grow old and die. Even the sun, if nothing intervenes to reverse the course of things, must at last solidify and become, as scientists foretell, "a dark, rigid globe, frozen and lifeless, among its lifeless family of planets."

Cruises of the Y. M. C. A. Yacht Amazon

(See Pictorial Section.)

TWENTY THOUSAND members of the Greater New York Young Men's Christian Association and several times that number of their friends have been aroused to a keen interest in yachting by the quiet presentation to the association of the trim ocean steam schooner yacht Amazon, ninety tons, 108 feet over all, by Commodore Arthur Curtiss James of the Seawanhaka Yacht Club and Cleveland H. Dodge.

The Amazon was constructed in 1902 for a wealthy Philadelphian with the intention of making a cruise around the world, but her owner died and the vessel was put up for sale at auction by the estate. She was secured for the Young Men's Christian Association through the efforts of Dr. Frederick Knowles, physical director of the Harlem branch of the association, and was used during the Summer season of 1905 for one and two week pleasure outings. Dr. Knowles is an enthusiastic devotee of wholesome sports, especially so of aquatics, and it has long been a cherished hope with him to provide a fleet of Summer yachts that would bring within reach, at little expense attached thereto, the delights of yachting.

Capt. Charles Cronin, the "Cape Cod boys'" associate, who knows every eddy from Portland, Me., was placed in charge of the Amazon, with a crew of two able seamen, a chef, and a steward. Vacationists came aboard and were divided into squads of five was settled as soon as each squad was given its duties, fore and aft or forward, port or starboard, as they assisted in hoisting sails or anchor in case of emergency. The squads were also assigned to duty daily, during which time they were responsible for the ship's cleanliness and shipshape. The necessary work could be performed within a half hour, and then each member took his regular turn of two hours on watch. A physical director accompanied the cruises and gave the men a course of exercise each day, weather permitting.

In this manner just enough work was had to keep the appetites on edge, and plenty of time to enjoy cruising, fishing, swimming, baseball, dancing, and other exercises. Ten dollars a week, or less than the cost of good board at a Summer hotel in the mountains, covered all necessary expenses. This included blankets and wholesome meals. The only extras, covering carfare while visiting ashore, souvenir postals, &c., could be held within $5 a week. A suit of working clothes, "sneakers," and hat add to the comfort of the trip. The cost does not exceed $2, and half of this may be redeemed at the end of the cruise by returning the articles to the association. Thus a fortnight's cruise up the Sound, touching under ordinary circumstances Bridgeport, New London, Block Island, Shelter Island, New Bedford, Newport, Narragansett, Martha's Vineyard, and, in some cases, Boston, may be had within $30.

A reunion of the vacationists who participated in this year's cruises will be held during the Winter, when it is probable that plans will be laid for augmenting the Young Men's Christian Association fleet,

"My Best Illustration and Why I Think So"

Four Well-known Illustrators Make Selections from Their Work and Tell Something About Their Methods.

(See First Page Pictorial Section.)

THE habitual novel reader, whose experience with fiction extends over a quarter of a century, must often have marveled at the contrasts—artistic and suggestive—formed between the illustrations of his early books and the pictures which give emphasis to the dramatic episodes in the novels of to-day. With the invention and development of appliances and methods for the reproduction of pictorial work, new obligations have been exacted from the illustrator until his artistic status is now about the same as that of a painter on canvas. Indeed, the latter is often glad to gain a public outside the picture gallery by permanently interpreting an author's imagination. In other words, many of the book illustrations to-day are pictures which, if framed and properly placed in a sympathetic environment, would be considered "paintings," unless possibly through the fact that the artist had been forced by mechanical exigencies of reproduction—not yet perfected—to qualify his treatment or limit his use and selection of pigments or pencils. The four pictures selected this week for the series, "My Best Illustration and Why I Think So," are worthy of examination aside from their popular pictorial interest, as they represent distinct methods of treating themes similar in action and very similar in atmosphere.

Horace T. Carpenter.

IN a recent novel by F. Marion Crawford ("Whosoever Shall Offend") there are outlined with marvelous skill certain phases of the Campagna world. Ercole and his strange-looking dog are characters never to be forgotten. Ercole is as characteristic a part of that expanse which stretchs from the Alban and Samnite hills to the Roman shore as is his uncouth, four-legged companion, and as had been the ancestors of both from the time when Rome had been but a sheepfold, and when both man and dog in their fierce energy were encompassing a stronghold on Palatine Hill. The setting given by the author for dog and man is as follows:

"The man's name was Ercole, that is to say, Hercules; and though he was not a giant, he certainly bore a closer resemblance to the hero than his dog did to dogs in general. 'He was born in my house,' Ercole said, when any one asked questions. 'Find a better one if you can. His name? I call him Nino, short for John, because he barks so well at night. You don't understand! It is the "voice of one crying in the wilderness."'

"He (Ercole) was short and skinny, though he was as wiry as a monkey; his face was slightly pitted with the smallpox, and the malaria of many summers had left him with a complexion of the color of cheap leather; he had eyes like a hawk.

"'You are a good dog, Nino,' he would say. 'You are the consolation of my soul. But you do not understand those things. Corbario is an assassin. * * * When I look at his face, a chill seizes me, and I tremble as when I have the fever. You never had the malaria fever, Nino. Dogs don't have it, do they?'

"At the question Nino turned his monstrous head to one side and looked along his muzzle at his master. If he had possessed a tail, he would have wagged it, or thumped the hard ground with it a few times; but he had none. He had probably lost it in some wild battle of his stormy youth, fought almost to death against the huge Campagna sheepdogs; or perhaps a wolf had got it, or perhaps he had never had a tail at all. Ercole had probably forgotten, and it did not really matter much.

"'Corbario is an assassin,' he said. 'Remember that, Nino. As for his poor lady, she is a little lacking, or she would never have married him. But she is a saint, and what do saints want with cleverness? They go to paradise. Does that need much sense? We should all go if we could. Why do you cock your head on one side and look at me like a Christian? Are you trying to make me think you have a soul? You are made of nothing but cornmeal and water, and a little wool, poor beast! But you are not an assassin like her husband.'

"At this Nino threw himself upon his back with his four legs in the air and squirmed with sheer delight, showing his jagged teeth and the roof of a very terrible mouth, and emitting a series of wolfish sounds; after which he suddenly rolled over upon his feet again, shook himself till his shaggy coat bristled all over his body, walked sedately to the open door of the hut, and sat down to look at the weather."

It would be easier, and, I am quite sure, a much greater pleasure to the reader if I were to continue quoting from a book in whose pages I have been privileged to add a few thoughts more or less my own in the way of illustrations, rather than to answer more directly a question that has been put to me by the editor. But if the foregoing leads me up to the point of expressing a preference for some one particular illustrative drawing of my own, it is because this admirable Campagna characterization by the author was an incentive for intelligent interpretation which almost any illustrator might take delight in attempting. It was my good fortune to spend several months with the author of the book in his fascinating Italian world. And it seemed to me as the author's story progressed from day to day that nothing took hold of my imagination with such vividness as the characters of Ercole and his dog. Nor did this impression leave me when we were in Rome together, whether absorbing Old World conditions in cathedral, palace, or in some ancient ruin under such valued and delightful guidance. Much less so when we were out in the Campagna country. Here were the wine carters in their picturesque hooded carts, with brightly tasseled horaes, throwing deep purpled shadows on the glaring Frascati road. And here was Ercole, and at his heels Nino, the queer, big-headed, bloodshot-eyed dog that feared no living creature, from the vicious, snarling wolf to the huge sheep dogs that one does not go out of his way to pet. Ercole and his dog, as shown here in the reproduction, were the outcome of this particular experience. In that this character study brought words of approval from the author, and realized in a sense the illustrator's conception better than some more carefully worked out model studies, there is at least a show of reason for selecting this particular drawing from a group of many, and saying, This is one.

IT is rather hard for me to say why I chose the accompanying drawing of McAllister instead of some other one from the book. The reason may be in the fact that it, so to speak, characterizes the whole series, bringing out, as it does, the detective feature in the stories, and showing McAllister in trouble with the police. And then the situation is typical of New York City—the scene of most of the stories. The idea running thoughout these stories was one of mistaken identity—a case where, from a picture standpoint, the expression of a face would explain the situation.

The subject of expression is an important one in illustration, for in showing it you make the characters act a part. And, to my mind, good character counts far more than technique.

Although a picture may be perfect technically, it will not always appeal to the reader's sympathies. The artist in illustrating a book must keep in mind the fact that people are interested in the characters and should aim to portray them like humans.

Technique is something that can be acquired; but the portrayal of character has to come from itself—it is purely imaginative.

I think that very few models can be found to suit the characters in a book. I may say that I have employed three men for the last eight years, using them merely as a suggestion.

As a rule I always try to bring out the literary quality as well as the artistic in a picture, and usually the impressions I get from the first reading of a manuscript are those to which I go back.

The dramatic quality of the story always appeals to me. And in working on a certain set I make it a point of studying the mise en scène and the details of the costumes portrayed in the story. A picture is never dropped when the first sketch of it is not to my liking. But when work has to be finished at a certain time, such pains cannot be taken.

Very few of those who read books have any idea of the amount of work that many of the illustrations absorb; that is, when the illustrator goes into the thing conscientiously. It is not always the actual work on a picture that the artist considers; it is the preparation for that work.

Every story offers new problems to the illustrator and opens up new fields for study and research.

Additional interest is given to his work by occasional trips to study the locality and people in the story. This tends to broaden his views. It is necessary for an illustrator to be observing and to have a retentive memory; the more he travels and comes in contact with people the bigger his field becomes.

Of course, in the case of the McAllister

awings there is such a fa ilarity of enes and the times that ery little dy is required. One sim had to eel" the characters and ake them in pictures what the auth suggested his text.

IT IS difficult for me to say why I like this drawing better than my others. Possibly it is because this is among my most recent.

Usually when I finish a picture I think it fine, and exhibit it with the artist's inevitable—"The best drawing I've ever done." Of course I think it is good, for it is evident if I could see faults in it I would correct them.

This drawing is to illustrate the new edition of "The Lightning Conductor," and is loaned through the kindness of Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. I made a drawing before for this book, and while it was used at first, it was unsatisfactory to the authors because the automobile was not of the extinct type described in the story.

The fact that the artist did not own a car hampered the work, and I feel this to be the fault of the publishers.

Every reader of a good book more or less lives the hero part himself, and the artist simply does the same thing with his mind's eye, observing the grace and picturesqueness of every character and scene.

This "Lightning Conductor," which I read three times, gave me a great treat in fancy, and I imagined I was the proud auto owner—the Brown of the story—and wandered to upper Broadway after work to the haunts of the motor cars, half Brown and half myself.

But this "playing" has to stop when you come to draw the man, and so you draw some other fellow and turn over to him forever the mythical car.

Finally, I still like this drawing for the reason that I have not seen the reproduction, nor heard the authors' comments, and my friends have been kind about it.

Eliot Keen

Of course, many "troubles" arise during the painting, and these are often overcome by "accidentals" (to use a technical word of the artist)—"accidentals offer the best inspiration in a man's work, and are its happiest phase. However, these "accidentals" merely pull things together in the important matter of values and color contrasts that play so large a rôle in a composition.

To me, the most difficult problem is to make an illustration at once dramatic and artistic in its treatment.

There is nothing that I can say by way of associations or impulse that prompted the doing of this particular illustration. It is the product of considerate selection from a great many subjects marked at the first reading of the manuscript.

It has been my method to select at least three or four times as many subjects as are required for the story, and this bulk is soberly boiled down to the number of illustrations needed. I try as a rule to embody the entire story in my group of pictures and bring out the main characters to their best advantage.

A CASE FOR INVESTIGATION.

A RETIRED London merchant who had purchased an estate in the north of England, took an extensive view of his responsibilities toward his tenants, endeavoring to regulate both their sanitation and their morals.

Perhaps the village folk might in time have tempered their resentment over the new-fangled appliances thrust upon them, but a sore point was the new Squire's interference in such matters as the bringing up of their children. Even the parents of good-for-naughts rose to defend their offspring—and their own methods.

Finally a clever old woman known in the village as Dame Margaret, constituted herself a committee of one to teach the new proprietor a lesson.

"You are the mother of children, eh, Dame Margaret?" said the Squire in his pompous fashion, accosting the old woman one day after church.

"Yis, Squire—three lads," replied Margaret, assuming a melancholy expression and wagging her head portentously.

"Um—I trust that they are all in suitable employment and a credit to their training?" said the proprietor, scenting food for sermons.

"Ther's strange gooin's on wi' my lads, Squire," replied Margaret, waxing more dolorous.

"How's that?" demanded the Squire, sharply.

"Weel, neaw, ther's my Bob, he's awlous cryin' about his wark; ther's Jeemes as never stops five minutes in a place when he's dooin' wark; an' Ned, he's awlous lookin' for summat to do, an' hardly ever finds it!"

"Woman, you have brought them up all wrong, I say!" cried the Squire, incensed at this record of shiftlessness. And then he launched into a tirade, to which Dame Margaret listened meekly. The little group of villagers gathering around, glanced frequently at the old dame, whom they knew of old, even if the new proprietor did not.

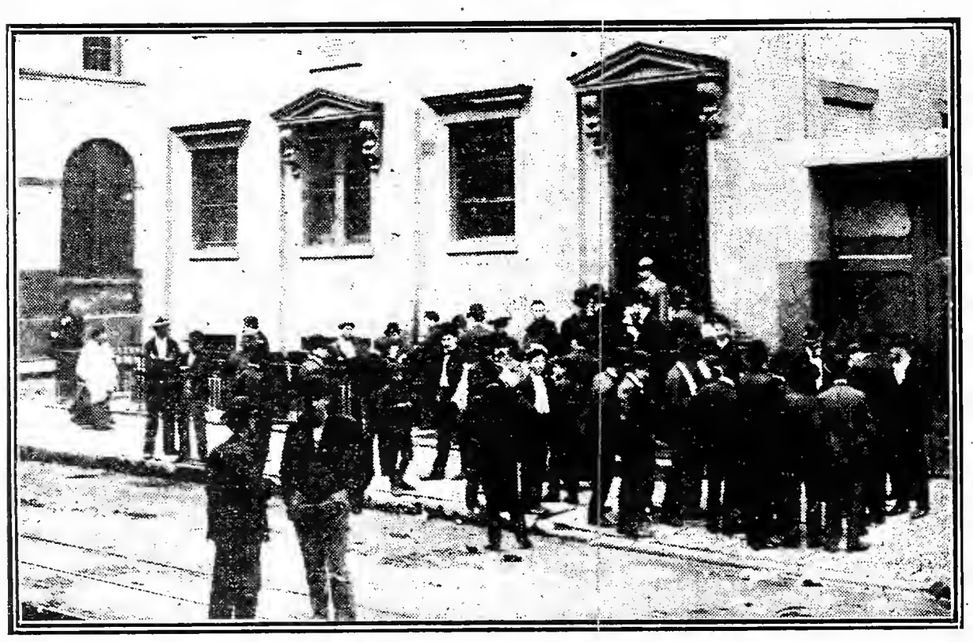
"Weel, Squire," said Margaret, when she had allowed things to go far enough, "ye see, it's this wy wi' my lads. There's my Bob, he goas reaund wi' a fish cart, cryin' fish; Jeemes has been a postman this eight year, an' Ned, he's up to Lunnun i' th' police force."

ANXIOUS TO ECONOMIZE.

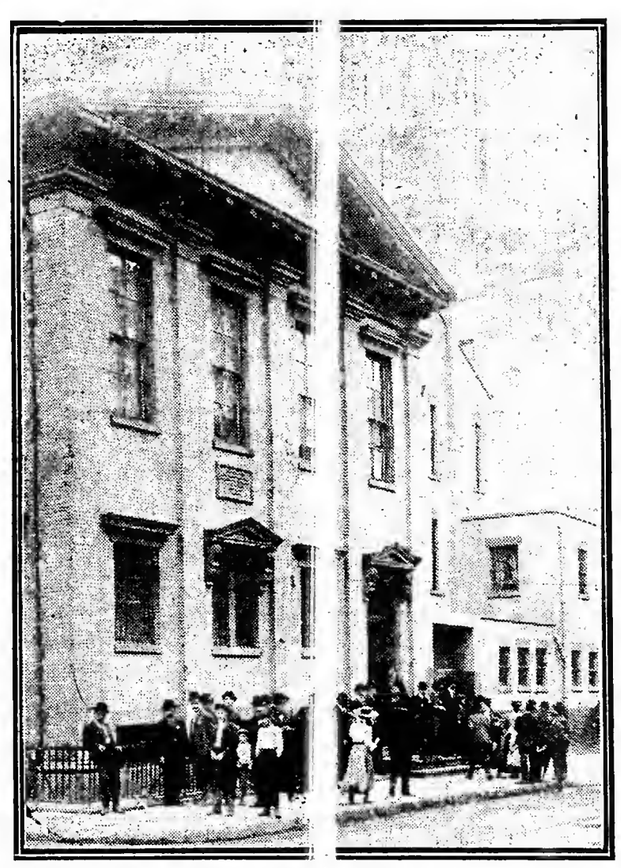
"EARLY this morning," said the Post Office man who collects the mail from the boxes in a Brooklyn district, "when I arrived at the corner of Gates Avenue and Broadway I found a crowd collected around an excited man who was waiting for me to open the box which is on that corner.

"The man at once made a break for me, and inquired if I would take out a post card for him which he had inadvertently posted with a 2-cent stamp affixed, as he had since learned it was possible to send such a card through the mail for 1 cent, and he wished to remove the 2-cent stamp and replace it with a 1-cent stamp."

Old Essex Market Court Will Soon Be No More



A Typical Morning Crowd Outside the Essex Market Court.



The Old Courthouse Which Will S n Be a Thing of the Past.

FEW of the many who live, frequently fifteen in a room, in the tenements near by care that the old Essex Market Court is doomed. With their older children at school and the younger playing in the gutters, they are happy in their own way. There are saloon keepers who will suffer and landlords who will rejoice that the court is to be moved to the south side of Madison, between Clinton and Montgomery Streets. The courage to appear in court and the jollifications at the release from the hands of the law will be acquired and celebrated in new drinking places. The landlords will have vacant rooms to let in an overcrowded district, the pay for a little space to sleep in being better than that for office rent.

It will be the same old neighborhood to most of the people quartered there. There will be the litter in the streets close to the old court, where youngsters scarcely able to walk will play as in the past, with busy parents secure in the belief that there is a special act of Providence to keep them from under the wheels of passing trucks.

There will be a fight now and then, but the battles will not be as they were, because the philanthropy of the city has provided in William H. Seward Park an opportunity for the boys who can hit hard enough to hurt. There the youngsters can come to proper settlements of their respective strength in games of basket ball and other rough sports without the need of a ring of cheerers on.

\+ + +

The change, which will be scarcely marked by the many when the Essex Market Court goes to Madison Street, is the occasion for the deepest sorrow on the part of several of the old-timers, who will find Essex Street, minus its court, like the earth deserted by the sun.

"Essex Street will never be what it was," sighs Henry F. Ripper, born and bred in the shadow of the old Essex Market Court.

"The Williamsburg Bridge is making of what was an ideal neighborhood for the old fellows a howling desert. There is change on change, but we who were born here will stick it out to the end. It would be too bad for any of us to leave now. It is only right that we should stick to the old living place until there is but one to be carried over the bridge to the final sleeping place.

"Of course there were changes before the Williamsburg Bridge was planned or built, but since its coming they have multiplied. This was a swell neighborhood when I was a boy. Almost every man owned his own house.

"Then there came the host of Irish with political potentialities. The Knickerbockers moved northward. It was not so very long before the Irish dropped the pick to fill their pocketbooks in the contracting business. Then there were the Huns and the Slavs, the Italians, and finally this migration of a nation of Jews.

"Those who live among them have no prejudice against them. We know that God chose them long ago, and it must be true that He knew what he was about in the beginning. They are good to their own and to the unfortunate of other races. But the neighborhood is not what it was when I was a boy."

Pointing to the stone imbedded in the brick work of the old court, Ripper declared that it had looked down upon more peoples of the nations of the earth than any other stone on earth. He would make no exception to the Pyramids, nor even the Coliseum at Rome. The inscription reads as follows:

> Erected A. D. 1856.
> N. S. Selah, Commissioner.
> James Irving, Superintendent of Public Buildings.
> J. Correja, Jr., Architect.

Ripper and his close friend "Rosey," the lawyer, agree that the new building of a fine gray granite, with its modern fire escapes, is all that it should be, if it had been erected on the old site. But, like the man who walked a long way trying to catch up with the moon, they find themselves lost.

The younger lawyers in the neighborhood learned in some mysterious way long before the laying of the cornerstone of the new building that the Essex Market Court was to be moved over to Madison Street. All the money they had saved and such money as they could borrow they invested in obtaining leases in the houses on both sides of Madison Street, between Clinton and Montgomery Streets.

The old-time lawyers rejoiced for a time that the youngsters did not bother them in the Essex Market Court. They were lacking the tip that some one had given their juniors, and unaware that the youngsters were busy collecting rents from the property which they have since changed into law offices.

Madison Street is now ablaze with new gilt shingles that blaze for the names of attorneys who were not most often employed in the old court. The old fellows find that either they must go into partnership with the youngsters or spend from the profits of many years' toil large sums to buy off the leases of their formerly despised rivals. The new signs of gold are of such staggering proportions that there is no space to be had or to hire where they may tack up their well-known business cards.

The old fellows, with the wisdom of years, are endeavoring to show no anxiety, believing that this is the way they can best undo the harm that has come to them. Until the time for the final settlement they are congregating after court in the house of "Rosey," who is the oldest living continuous practitioner of Essex Market.

"Rosey," the veteran of the Essex Market Court, sat with Ripper, Abrahams, Levi, and some of the old-timers the other afternoon looking up and down the streets for possible clients. They can see them a block off, and it is said that they can see them around a corner. "Rosey," who has long been the President of the Essex Market Bar Association, related that "der kinder" had proposed to make him the President of the Madison Street Court Bar Association on Oct. 15, when the Essex Market organization would go out of existence with the closing of the old court.

Levi and all present voted that the youngsters seemed to be showing some leniency toward the veterans and then story telling began. "Rosey" led off with a reminiscence dating back thirty-six years, when Barnabus Osborne was elected under the former system. Barnabus was particularly hard on drunks. James R. Steers, elected with him in 1857, had been a terror with prisoners who beat their wives. He was the brother of George Steers, who built the America, which brought back the Queen's Cup.

The thought of salt water made everybody thirsty and the yarns were interrupted for a round or two of "schnaps." With everybody sympathetic, tributes were paid to the memory of William Mansfield, who had a horror of family ructions and a way of bringing wife and husband together for the sake of the children.

"The worst in the bunch," remarked "Rosey," "was Joseph H. Koch. That is, for the lawyers. We came near starving in his day. There was no use of an attorney for any one in trouble. The old Judge was so lenient that he discharged them all. When a fellow was brought in with the marks of a policeman's club on him, although it was certified by any number of witnesses, Koch would look at him and weep. Then he would discharge him with a few remarks about the weaknesses of mankind.

"All a fellow needed to get his discharge was to attack a policeman and get a beating. That meant a certain discharge in the morning. As the police were getting fat and the lawyers thin, it began to be believed that people who had done wrong paid the officers to club them rather than give money to lawyers to defend them, with the chance that they might get convicted.

"But Koch did not last forever, and there were good old days when we made money. After the revolution against Tammany and Tweed there was the legislation destroying popular judges in the sense that they were elected, and we prospered."

\+ + +

Levi interrupted, asking the Nestor of Essex Market if he remembered the time, still celebrated in Municipal Court annals, when he lost a case before James T Kilbreth by asking the accuser of his client:

"Were you there when you got hit?"

"My eye speaks for itself," was the answer.

"Rosey" looked a little sad as he remarked that he did remember losing one case.

"Charles J. Gliteau practiced law in the old court," continued the veteran. "No one ever thought then that he would kill President Garfield. He was not affected with the folly of wanting a political job, and used to gather in his $5 or $50, according to the means of his clients, whether they were freed or sent up the river.

"There were strange scenes in the old court, but the most startling that I can remember was when Michael Murphy dropped dead. He had been Deputy Sheriff under William C. Connor in 1874, and stood well in the community until he drifted into the policy business. He was arrested for policy dealing. The court was filled with his victims. He looked around him, threw his hands over his head, and fell dead.

"But the greatest of them all was Patrick Duffy. He sat on the bench at the time that all the women were banging their front hair. To him this was a horror and an outrage against civilization. Every woman brought before him with a bang was held for examination and sent up the river.

"I will acknowledge that I saw this eccentricity of the Judge before the others, and that I had in my office a glue made of quince seeds. All a client had to do was to plaster back the bang with the stuff. His Honor would see the expanse of forehead and at once say 'Discharged.'

"'Pat' Duffy had a great heart. I could have called him the most lenient of the Magistrates if he had not been so hard on the women who wore bangs. Sometimes he would even forgive them if they could show by their finger nails that they were acquainted with needle and thread or the washtub.

"One sure way for a man to get discharged was to hold his hands, palms up, in sight of the Magistrate. If 'Pat' saw that they were callous the man had no further trouble. The jail was not his end. The door was open to the street. Prisoners had a way in those days of asking 'what for' when they got 'six months.' His Honor would wink one eye and whistle as he did so. That meant the removal of the prisoner and the calling of the next case. Duffy was a bird.

\+ + +

"Once there was a man brought before him charged with abandonment. He was by client and claimed that there had been a legal marriage. This being satisfaction of his Honor. He left the court the woman accosted the man, crying out:

"'What! Are you not my husband?'

"'That, my dear, I have not denied, the lawyer said so,' he replied, and ran, without paying me my fee.'

At this point the group of Essex Market and soon-to-be Madison Street attorneys rushed to business. There was a policeman on man in the possession of stolen goods the way to court, a woman with them calling him a thief many times, and there was a great crowd following. He had old her a chicken a quarter of a pound under weight.

Lived for Years with Santa Claus and His Tribe

What Pan Bogoras Saw During His Stay with the Reindeer Chukchees of Far Eastern Siberia---Compelled Russians to Respect Their Courage.

SO far from being a myth or the creation of the silly imagination of grown-ups, as the otherwise child of America is apt to assert, Santa Claus exists in the flesh, and has a wife and numerous Clauskins, a family, in fact, of children and uncles and aunts, who not only ride behind strings of reindeer in sledges, but mount the reindeer and travel on its back many a league across the frozen tundra. Santa Claus has a local habitation on the great peninsula that stretches eastward out of Asia to Bering Straits where it almost joins America. He has a folk and a name, which it is Chukchee. What is more, all the tribes into which the race of Santa Claus is divided not only those who call themselves Chauchu, or "rich in reindeer," but their neighbors, the Lamuts and the Yukaghirs and Tungus, are famous carvers of little images out of wood and tusks of narwhals, out of teeth of whales and the enormous tushes of fossil elephants found buried in the river beds of Siberia. Great makers of dolls are they also, and they fabricate the most beautiful clothes out of reindeer skin and the pelt of seals, and edge them with white fur of the arctic hare or with white feathers from the arctic birds. So that not only in their use of the reindeer and their life amid the snow, but in their dress as well, and the gifts they bring are they truly one with the jolly little fellow who on the night before Christmas whirls through the snow with presents for the Little Folk.

It is a Russian who brings us complete and sure accounts of the habits and customs, the dwellings and reindeer herds, the Winter life and Summer migrations, the fairs and reindeer races of the Chukchees, that stalwart people of the Arctic Circle, who dwell far north of Kamtchatka—up to the shores of the Arctic Sea. Pan Waldemar Bogoras lived from 1890 to 1898 among the Chukchees on the River Kolyma, which starts on its northward course from near the Sea of Okhotsk and empties into the Arctic Ocean. Two years more were passed in Kamtchatka, Anadyr, and the Chukchee Peninsula. He has just brought out the first part of a great work on these scattered tribes, which is being published in English among the memoirs issued by the American Museum of Natural History.

Hitherto we have known the Chukchee tribes chiefly from reports of whalers and expeditions on the sea; but these are almost always coast tribes, who use dogs instead of reindeer for transportation. They are not exactly of the Santa Claus kind. They call themselves Angalit, or sea folk, from "anqa," the sea, or else Ramaglat, which means "seacoast dwellers." Those who live in the interior, where only the larch and stunted willows maintain themselves along the water courses, and everywhere else nothing lives but reindeer moss, and lichens, these inlanders exist solely by means of their herds. It is a country where horses cannot live for lack of grass and dogs are a nuisance because they stampede the reindeer. The people are a sturdier race than their kinsfolk on the coast, whom they visit, however, from time to time on trading expeditions to exchange their reindeer, fox, and bear skins for tea and tobacco, fish and seal meat, and foreign articles that come by sea. Their courage has been felt by the Russians, who in 1730 and again in 1747 suffered severe defeats at their hands, so that in 1764 the furthest northeast fort, that of Anadyrsk, had to be abandoned. Only in 1789 was intercourse renewed, and since then Russia has treated them with great caution.

The Chukchees ars a very independent, self-sufficing people, who do not take over words or customs from other races, such as the Eskimo, whom they find here and there along Bering Straits, or the Kamtchatkans, whom they touch on the south, or even the Russians, who have settled as traders in certain spots, or the Americans whom they meet on the coast. They fabricate their own words for foreigners and foreign things. The Russians they call Malhi-Tannitan, "firetools foreigners," or else Leluremkin, "bearded people." The American whalers they call Lelutvilit, "whisker boat men," from Lelutvet, "whisker boat"—as if the long whiskers of our whaling Captains had impressed them forcibly. Another term is Pnaukulit or "file mongers," from Pnaukum, a whetstone, probably because iron files were traded by the Americans for skins, but their language knew only the stone which the iron article supplanted.

Chukchee men indulge in sports, especially in wrestling and long-distance races, heaving great stones and kicking footballs made of reindeer skin. The coast dwellers and Eskimo like to toss one another in skin blankets, not so much for sport as in ceremony; for they attach an obscure religious idea to what we consider rather an indignity. They indulge in swings, either in our way from two trees or two poles, or in a circular way by swinging round a central pole. After a heavy, bearish fashion they dance. One of their dances is called "The Boneless One." The object is by jerks and staggering motions to act as if they had no bones, the dancers chanting wearliedly "Ani val! Ani val!" which means "I am boneless, I am boneless." They have songs about the swan, the walrus, the seal, and reindeer; while repeating them they imitate these beasts and birds. The sandpiper has very curious motions when fighting and making love, and a favorite song with descriptive action is "The Fighting Sandpiper."

Children have their dances and games. They cherish singular tops whirled by the swift unloosing of wound cord, as well as peg tops, but very different as to shape. Boys hang a block of wood from a pole, and while it is in rapid motion capture it with their miniature lassos, as the elders lasso the reindeer. They have also pitch and toss of hoops caught in the air by sticks, like our own game, and they play catscradle and other sports of address. The girls play with dolls, and believe that their dolls will make them sure of having children of their own when they grow up.

Chukchecs, as a rule, are good-humored and kindly people, as arctic travelers have experienced when thrown on their mercy after a breakdown of transportation, or an arctic shipwreck; but many cases of cold-blooded cruelty are known of them. Blood feuds are carried out relentlessly, often the entire family being sacrificed for the act of one member. They are bronze colored as to face, and generally darkish hue. The men often have good features; the women are more Mongolian in facial type, but are sometimes good-looking according to our standards. Ths hair is generally straight like that of Indians and Eskimos, but often wavy and sometimes tightly curled. Thcy have more hair on the face than their next of kin Lamuts and Yakuts. They ars proud of mustaches, and do not pull the hair out of the lip and chin out by the roots as the latter do. Of fairly good stature they are given to stoutness, but capable of great endurance. They have small hands and feet. They tax their constitutions by bolting their food, considering it a cause for pride if they can gorge themselves quickly. Two kinds of dwellings ars used by the inland or reindeer Chukchees, a skin tepee with inner room of furs, and a half subterranean house with a tentlike top, much as the Koraks build further south, and some of the tribes on our Northwest Coast also.

Reindeer Chukchees are necessarily scattered, owing to the necessity of constantly changing the pasture for their herds. The flocks have to be constantly watched, or they will stray away and join the wild reindeer. There are certain places where by traditional usage at certain seasons the clans and tribes meet and hold a fair, when the traders make their appearance in long sledge caravans. On such occasions there are reindeer races for prizes, wrestling matches, and contests of finger and arm pulling. If coast dwellers are present with dog trains there will be dog sledge races also.

Reindeer Chukchees distinguish different varieties of their steeds, some being larger and stronger than others, one kind specialized for the sled, another for the saddle. As the illustration shows, the seat on deerback is well forward; this is a Lamut lady of Markova, a settlement about the centre of the Chukchee peninsula, where Russians, Lamuts, and Yakuts are found well within the Chukches territory. The woman in the other picture is one of a dwindled tribe called Chuvantzy, which favored the Russians more than a century ago during ths wars the Chukchees put up against the invaders, and was almost wiped out when the Russians had to retire from the country. Somewhat different is the type of the Eskimos who are found on St. Lawrence Island, south of Bering Straits and at different points on the Asiatic side. These coast Eskimos have been strongly affected by the white man's commerce in oil and sealskin; for many generations they have formed part of whaling crews; while the inland Chukchecs remain little influenced by outsiders. Some, of course, travel on trading expeditions to the coast and ship as hunters; but this does not alter ths habits of those who tend the herds in that desolate land.

\+ + +

The standing figurs is that of Santa Claus himself, dressed in furs from head to foot. He is a Chauchu or Chukchee of Markova. His eyes appear drawn together by the constant play of daylight on the snow-clad plains. Mr. Bogoras reckons about 12,000 souls among the Chukchees, of whom three-quarters ars Reindeer, and one-quarter Maritime or Coast Chukchecs. They are a healthy race and prolific. There is evidence that originally they were all coast dwellers, and that by domesticating the reindeer they have improved their condition. The coast tribes are exposed to many dangers, perils of the deep, famine when the food supply is interrupted, diseases brought by sailors. Those of tho interior have in their herds an almost unfailing source of food. As their land has apparently neither gold nor coal, it will not be worth the while of Russians or other "civilized" peoples to invade their land and destroy them.

THE FREE NIGHT SCHOOLS OF NEW YORK AND WHAT THEY ARE DOING

The heights of great men, reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
We tolling upwards, in the night.
—LONGFELLOW.

THERE are many surprising evidences of Father Knickerbocker's moral wisdom in New York, strange as this may appear to those who see so many sensational contradictions of it in the newspapers.

Work of various kinds is being done quietly, systematically, rapidly, toward a practical education of the foreign surplus that crowds its international incompetents within the city limits.

The Board of Education of Greater New York has grappled not merely with the problem of teaching the children of a population that numbers over 4,000,000 of people, but it has pursued the spirit of its inauguration among the adult children from those parts of Europe where monarchical custom has shrewdly kept them in mental, and often moral, darkness.

The public school is no longer a casual benefit over here, it is a compelling instinct of National pride, and the free night schools are a direct outcome of the same principle, solving the problem of men and women who come to this country unprepared for its competitive standards of success, that they may better understand the promise of republican equality.

Just what the results may develop of reciprocal gratitude in the conduct of this foreign element is really a big question. Under every man's skin is a racial virus that compels many different uses of the education Father Knickerbocker freely gives him. How this liberal donation of American enlightenment to foreign people may actively affect their harmony with the ideals of American citizenship makes interesting conjecture. It is not a matter that concerns a Board of Education, that is doing an exceedingly difficult task with remarkable system and rapidity of effort.

The human side of this educational endeavor is what I especially investigated, not the statistical.

What one sees and hears in the elementary departments is but the awakening period, however; it is in the evening high schools that I centred my attention, because in these classes one sees the productiveness, the actual uplifting spirit of this free education that the city proudly affords the strangers that come to live with us.

There is nothing idly classical, no academic pedantry in the work laid out for the pupils of the Evening High Schools to do. Although a four years' course supplies a graduating pupil with a diploma that is recognized by the State Board of Regents, there is also in the plans of the Board of Education in this work a special realization of the ultimate purposes involved.

Ultimately the Board of Education knows that its pupils in the evening high schools want to advance themselves in practical possibilities, in worldly prospects, and they guide them toward success, not toward academic failure.

This, perhaps, is the most striking wisdom of what is being done in these night classes. The course in the evening high schools includes Latin, French, Spanish, German, higher arithmetic, physics, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, electricity, chemistry, anatomy, and physiology, English composition, grammar, rhetoric, and literature, business English, stenography, and typewriting, bookkeeping, commercial law, history and civics, political science, oratory, architectural, mechanical, and free-hand drawing.

The Wadleigh High School in Harlem is a building that is inspiring to look at even. It is one of the most beautiful, if not actually so, of the really magnificent big buildings the City of New York can boast of for its schools.

When the classrooms and corridors are brilliantly illuminated at night it looks like a magnificent old feudal palace in England.

Nearly 2,000 women and girls were pursuing their studies on the evening I went there. The classes begin at 7:30, and are divided into two hours, the pupils changing classrooms at the sound of a gong at 8:30.

"We have a very superior class of girls here," said Miss Slattery, the Principal of this evening high school, and as she took me from one classroom to the other I was impressed with the earnest, studious, sensibleness of these girls.

\+ + +

The picture taken of the class in phonography is a fair example of the poise and earnestness which seemed to pervads all the classrooms in this school. The traces of a foreign nationality have almost disappeared in these girls, for the public school system had made of them Americans. Many of the girls in this picture are employed in offices during the day, and attend the class in phonography to improve their speed, while some are learning it for the first time. This picture exhibits clearly the productiveness of these evening high schools of a practical, useful nature.

Public School No. 184 is situated near by, at 116th Street, between Lenox and Fifth Avenues.

Here I visited the class in chemistry, conducted by Mr. A. C. Neisch of Columbia, and his assistant, Mr. C. H. Olard. Here, as in every branch of the evening high schools, the training was toward practical chemistry. The laboratory is a high-ceilinged, spacious room, perfectly equipped with all the modern improvements.

The pupils were all young men, advanced types of young men, intelligent, alert, tremendously interested and attentive. There was a sort of camaraderie, a fellowship between teacher and scholars, that made this class especially effective as an example of the delightful spirit which the teachers inspire in their classes. This class seemed to me especially a high type of what the Board of Education can accomplish with its system of free education.

In the same school I visited the class in applied physics and electricity. This class alone, started last Winter with an attendance of over 200, is conducted by Dr. J. Loring Arnold, who has just begun his seventh year as instructor in this school. A study of the faces in the picture taken of this class reveals a wide range of types, of men old and young, and of boys.

The apparatus is very complete and costly, being donated by Mr. Hugo Newman, who started the class and who was subsequently appointed Principal of Public School No. 33, where he now is.

These Harlem evening high schools present a different type of men and women from those I saw on the east side, partly due to residential environment, no doubt.

The difference was not in the quality of work, but in the class workers themselves. These Harlem evening high schools impress upon them the stamp of American life, while the east side classes were more distinctively foreign in character and quality.

For instance, I visited two schools in the heart of the University Settlement districts; a school for women and girls and another for men and boys.

The first was Public School No. 147, on the corner of East Broadway and Sammel Street.

Miss Stein, the Principal of the evening classes, explained that most of her pupils were Russians, Poles, Hungarians, Armenians, chiefly a Jewish people, who, by the way, ths most obedient and adaptable of students, she added.

We passed from classroom to classroom, and in spite of the unusual disruption the pupils paid no heed to us, they were all absorbed in the teacher and her demonstrations on the blackboard.

Miss Paez was teaching Spanish to an advanced class, and although the manoeuvring of the photographer was sufficiently disconcerting, she did not stop her interesting talk, nor did she lose her hold upon ths interest of the pupils.

This picture represents the most advanced type of girls we have on the east side, girls who are studious and who are ambitious for educational opportunities.

We visited another evening school, where Miss Tingley was teaching literature, which English, its meaning and its

There are various types in the picture of this room that speak for themselves, all of them eloquent of manner and tory and educational antecedent history and advantages.

There is a refinement of manner and appearance, of conduct and feeling among the women and girls that attend these east side evening schools that distinguishes them at once from their neighbors. You step from the crowded coarseness of the eas de streets into a quiet, pleasant atmosphere which Miss Stein, who is a self-contained, courteous woman, especially in her position as Principal of P. S. 147, in her position as Principal of Public School 147.

At the corner of Rivington and Forsyth Streets is Evening High School 20, for men and boys.

This is perhaps the most crowded of all these free night schools and as an example of the kind of young men the east side is developing, the classrooms were a marked contrast to what New Yorkers might ignorantly expect to see.

W. C. Hess, the Principal of this night school, understands young men, and his long service as a teacher in the public schools enables him to enter a classroom and establish a sort of personal relationship with every pupil.

The class in German, a picture of which was taken first, is typical of young men who have the Board of Education to thank for becoming what they are, superior to many native-born Americans in educational experience and knowledge. Frequently professional men attend these night schools to perfect themselves in some special study, as, for instance, in the picture taken of this class there is a doctor who can be plainly identified in the foreground.

The class in oratory in this east side school is instructivo for its unique endeavor to give young men self-confidsnce and an independent bearing before their fellows.

"What do they take this course for?" I asked, as I looked over the class of Russians, Poles, Hungarians, and Armenians, who were watching the action of two Russian Hebrews reciting a scene from Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" in good, clear English.

"Just as soon as they get confidence they will become public speakers among their own people, teachers, leaders in Socialistic gatherings," said my informant.

Mr. Sheehan, the instructor of this class, is heart and soul in sympathy with his pupils, with their difficulties of language and accent, and I heard him encourage a young Pole who made his maiden speech to the class, commending him for his courage and his successful endeavor.

The biggest class in this school is the Latin class, conducted by A. I. Dotey, a teacher who has found time to write an elementary Latin school book that is being adopted by the Principals of the largest high schools in this city.

It is a great work that is being done in these evening high schools of New York, and the city should be proud to point to these bright beacons of its wisdom and its forethought, the evening high schools.

"O Wad Some Power!"

"YUSS," replied "Jed" Nicholls to a remark of the new Summer boarder whom he was bringing up from the station, "them makes nice fences, them flat-topped stons walls. The Eyetalians, them ez settled down by Croton to work on the new dam, makes 'em like that.

"In fact," (condescendingly,) "they ain't good for nothin' else, them Eyetallans."

"Indeed," said the new-comer.

"Yuss; I seen a heap of them Eyetallans, and I dunno whut this gov'ment is comin' to, lettin' in them ign'rant furriners!"

Jed flicked the old mare and gazed with gloomy foreboding into space. He had a red ribbon tied to ths whip—ths same as when, on the 4th of November last, he had driven over to Montrose and (for the first time in his career) assisted at the salvation of the country. Since that turning point in history proximity to Jed had been the only necessary condition to being permitted to listen to his political views.

"Yuss; the intelligent American voter ain't got no show alongside of the ign'rant furriner. Now take me 'n' my family. M' father and grandfather, ez fur back ez you kin go, ailuz voted the straight —— ticket like free 'n' intelligent Americans. And I—of course I done the same ez Pa. But whut kin citizens like us do fur the country agin a pack of ign'rant furriners that don't even speak the English language correct? Over in their own country the Eyetalians is a shiftless lot."

"Ah!" The new boarder was thoughtfully eying Jed. "Your information is highly interesting, young man, although some acquaintance with the land of the It—of the Eyetalians—had impressed me otherwise. I—"

"Yuss!" interrupted Jed, eagerly, having caught only the first "complimentary" words. "I kin give you heaps of information—in fact, they ain't much about Eyetallans that I don't know, one way 'r other. M' father has had 'em diggin' ditches on the farm, and I had to oversee consid'able.

"Ma's had Irishwomen to help housecleen, and last Fall Pa hired a Dutchman to pick apples. So I've had consid'able to do with furriners of all kinds.

"And I do say"—Jed expanded with the facts—"that they ain't another denomination on earth ez ignorant to learn ez the Eyetalians!"

Where Was He At?

Count de Coeur—Yes, she ask-ed me if we were en-ga-ged.

Friendly Counselor—Impossible! You must have misunderstood her. Even a widow in this country would hardly dare propose to a man.

Count de Coeur, (bleakly)—But she zaid if we ware en-ga-ged she would no longer wear her wedding ring. Are we, then, en-ga-ged—no? yes?

This Is Mr. Stedman's Birth Anniversary

EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN, M. A., L. H. D., LL. D., was born on Oct. 8, 1833.

He will be 72 years young to-day. The whole country knows who he is—poet, banker, journalist, and critic.

He refers to his friendships and experiences in journalism with most affection, for the groundwork upon which this celebrity has been achieved began when he was scarcely 20 in Norwich, Conn., where he was editor of The Tribune. From there he graduated after a short editorial service at Winsted, Conn., to the staff of The New York Tribune.

It was about this time that his friendship with the late John Hay began, and lasted through all the intervening years.

The late Secretary of State was born on ths same day and month as the poet, Oct. 8, 1838.

He would have been 67 years old to-day had he lived.

It was the custom, whenever at all possible, for these two distinguished Americans to celebrate their birthday anniversary together.

"The less said about my birthday the better I shall appreciate it," said Mr. Stedman, in his usual energetic, vigorous style, "because I have not yet caught up with the numberless letters of congratulation sent me on my seventieth birthday. It has taken me two years to clean up that correspondence, and I dread the new obligations a public announcement of this anniversary may bring about. And then, you know, I have lost my wife after over sixty years of married life with her, and my dear old friend John Hay has passed away. So, you see, I am going to pass a quiet birthday on my place in Bronxville; I am going to keep under cover."

In consideration of the regard in which Mr. Stedman is held in the literary and the financial world, some mention will be made of the occasion, but briefly.

Besides being a member of the Stock Exchange, with a busy dally life downtown since 1869, Mr. Stedman has been a prolific contributor to American literature and poetry.

In 1860 he published a volume of selected verses called "Poems Lyric and Idyllic." This was followed by two years of active service as a war correspondent from 1861 to 1863. In 1864 he published "Alice of Monmouth," and five years later "The Blameless Princess."

Then ten years intervened before he returned out "Lyrics and Idylls." In 1875 he published "Poets of America"; from 1889 to 1891 he compiled an exhaustive literary work called "A Library of American Literature." In 1892 followed "Nature and Elements of Poetry."

"A Victorian Anthology," published in 1896, was followed by the "American Anthology" in 1900. His last work, "Mater Coronata," was published in 1902.

Mr. Stedman is still as young and vigorous in temperament as he was, quick in movement, quick in speech, in fact there is a striking similarity in appearance and manner between the poet and his friend, the late John Hay. They were about the same height, the same build, the same direct, clear-headed, big-hearted sort of men. It is not because Edmund Clarence Stedman is 72 years young that he should not feel equal to the obligatory strain of answering a bushel of congratulatory letters, but because as he plows deeper into the furrowed years his labors and his ambition swamp him.

Norwegian Eider Duck Farm

ALTHOUGH it would present a lamentable illustration of man's inconsiderate cupidity, there could be no more interesting to the person taking an extended trip abroad than a visit to an eider duck farm. He will be obliged to go far up along the coast of Norway, and particularly to the Isafjardarjup, of the euphonious name, Isafjardarjup, see this unique sight, but it will repay him.

The reason they have eider duck farms there is because of strict protection to this beautiful the Norwegian law gives to this beautiful water fowl in its state; which became of great necessity some years ago, the commsrcial collector out of down and eggs having from time out of mind put such vast drains on species that the wild colonies had become so diminished that the extinction of the eider duck was a question of only very short time. Then enterprising men began domesticating the fowl, which seems to have been a somewhat easy matter.

Isafjardarjup Island, where the domestication of the eider duck began, and where the principal duck farms are, is about three-quarters of a mile in length, and is protected by a seawall along its coasts This seawall is dotted with small compartments, formed by building out or reserving moving stones at intervals. These cavities were left for ducks to nest in. There are thousands of them, and at the nesting season not can be found but will contain the nest of an eider duck. Not only are those receptacles full, but the fowls are occupying every possible other spot on the ground, on the wide window sills of the farmhouse, on the roof, all over a wall of turf that surrounds ths house, in an old windmill, and thick as flies on every available spot on the island or farm. A great many of the ducks in the compartments of the seawall will be wild ones; and these, at the approach of the visitor, will fly from their nests and join the drakes tossing on the waves outside, until the supposed danger is past.

But the domesticated ducks are so tame that one can stroke them as they sit on their nests; this trust of theirs is beautiful to see, but it is most shamefully abused; for as each one of these ducks lays her eggs and plucks out her down from her breast to cover them, she is lifted off, and both eggs and down are removed. This despoiled duck patiently goes on laying; but this time she can lay but three eggs more. This is her limit, and the last three eggs are not taken from the nest; but the down is. A third time she plucks herself to line her nest; this exhausts her supply of down. But even this does not stop the down collector in his robbery. He takes that last covering, and as the duck cannot, or will not, hatch her eggs without down, she summons her mate to her aid. This is by a plaintive cry, at the sound of which the otherwise indifferent drake hastens to her side, and plucks down from his own breast to supply her needs.

Dynagraph Car Unique as a Recorder of Railroad Defects

Ingenious Machinery Invented by its Owner, Dr. P. H. Dudley, to Test Track Conditions While Traveling at Twenty Miles an Hour.

ON a side track in the yards of the Grand Central Station in New York City a while ago there stood a car that at a glance seemed to be different from those near it, and while it had somewhat the appearance of a baggage car it had no side doors, and the windows did not seem to be placed just as those of a day coach, a sleeper, or a baggage car should have been.

On closer inspection, however, it was plain that this car did not belong to any railroad company, for on the headband instead of a railroad name there appeared in bold letters the words "Dynagraph and Track Indicator" extending the whole length of the car, and in small letters on the sides near the middle was the name "P. H. Dudley."

Under the double windows at either end of the car a section of rail was painted, which, together with the wording, would imply that this car had something to do with railroads. This was the fact, and a glance into the car from either end dispelled all doubt, for it was quite different from any car ever built, and it is the only one of its kind in the world.

In it Dr. and Mrs. P. H. Dudley have lived, traveled, and worked for more than a quarter of a century, for it is both home and workshop. All this and more the writer found out later, having made the acquaintance of the owner and his entertaining wife, and as they were soon to pull out of the yards on a short tour of inspection it was his good fortune and privilege to see this unique car while it was in motion and performing the wonderful things that electricity and other forces have made possible through the discoveries in science and mechanical engineering.

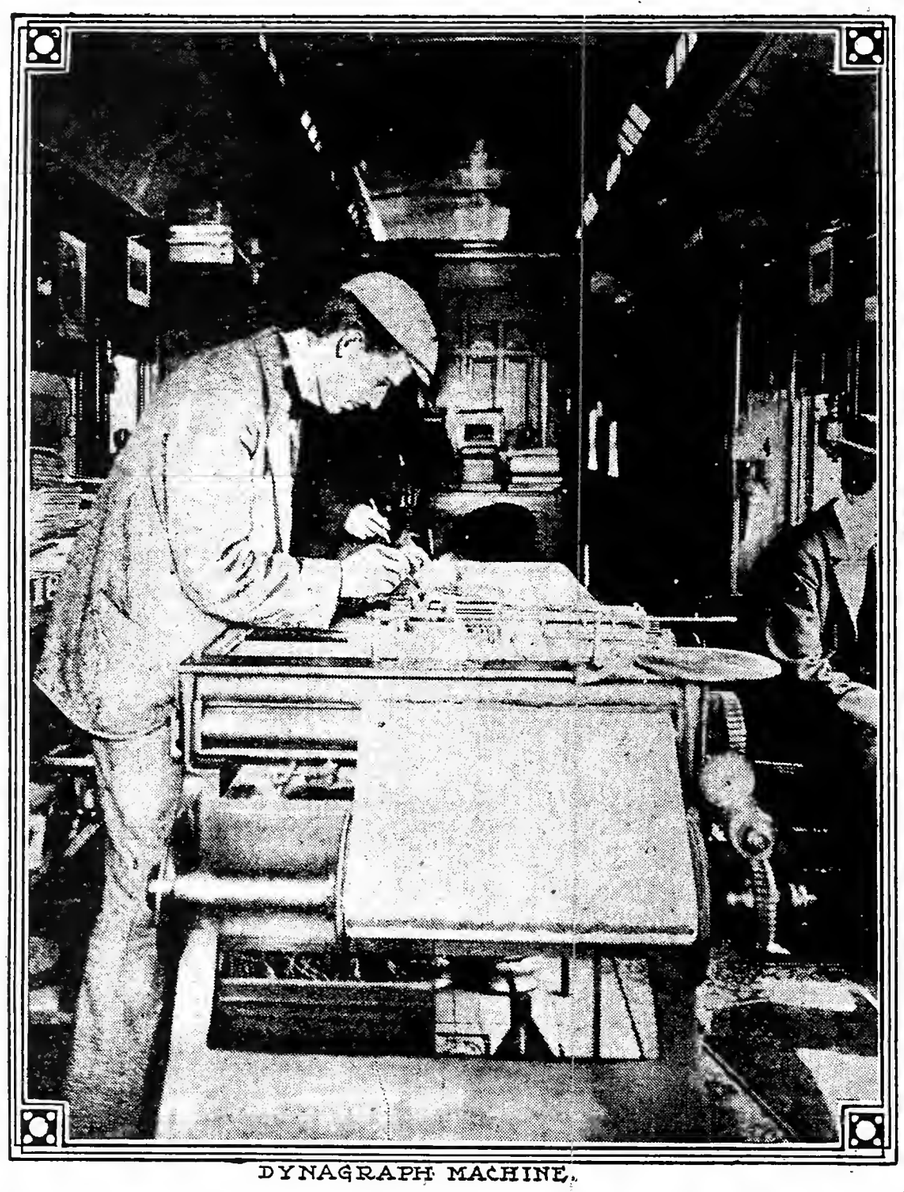
One end is devoted to the dynagraph machine, testing apparatus, scientific instruments, and paraphernalia for roadbed and track inspection, and the other is fitted with living compartments, closets, shelving, storerooms, and several useful pieces of furniture, as well as a hanging book case, a grand piano, and a luxurious couch, which in the daytime is piled with comfortable sofa pillows, and at night serves as a bed.

The object of this wonderful car is to inspect railroads, and, under the influence of electricity and compressed air, a record is made on paper showing exactly where tracks are out of line, roadbeds irregular, or where tracks are depressed that should be trued up and ballasted. This car and its machinery can accomplish more work than a dozen men could do in twice the time, and it does it so perfectly that often defects are recorded that would baffle the most expert section boss. It will also record certain defects in a track that a man could not see, such as the depression of rails and sleepers while a train is passing over them. It not only indicates this defect, but an attachment controlled automatically by electric and compressed air force paints the side of the rails where they are deflected or out of line, so when a section boss comes along with his gang they can repair the roadbed.

In general appearance the dynagraph machine closely resembles a small cylinder printing press. It has an arrangement of gear wheels at the side, a strip of paper passing through it which is unwound from one end and rewound on a roller at the other, and it is printed upon by pens. Extending out over this paper from one end are a number of slender metallic arms that are fitted with glass pens at their extremities. These pens are filled with red or blue ink, according to the sectional record, and one man is kept busy filling the pens and looking after the electrical mechanism when the car and machine are in motion.



DYNAGRAPH MACHINE.

Extending down through the floor of the car is a shaft with a universal joint, which is connected at the upper end with the dynagraph, while at the lower end it is cogged with the axle of a pair of wheels. By means of this shaft the speed of the dynagraph is regulated according to the speed of the car, and for good work it should be run at the rate of twenty miles an hour, preferably at the end of a train of passenger cars.

When the car is at work three men are kept busy, and in one of the illustrations the dynagraph is shown in working order speeding over the New York Central tracks behind a local train running twenty-two miles an hour. Dr. Dudley is standing over the record, making marginal notes; another man is busy filling the pens, and the third is sitting at a side window, where he calls out mile posts, bridges, curves, short tunnels, and signal posts. These are all noted on the margin of the paper roll that is passing through the dynagraph, so that when the report of the condition of roadbed and tracks is made up, Dr. Dudley can accurately state the true condition of them at the time this car passed over.

The marginal notes are a means of location, and if any serious trouble shows on the record the machine is so nicely adjusted that it is possible to state just how many feet or rods north or south of a certain post, bridge, or tunnel the track or bed is defective. By reading the record Dr. Dudley can report the condition of each section, and these reports are sent or wired to the boss of these sections so his gangs can make rapid repairs and line up tracks. It is a wonderful sight to watch the dynagraph when it is marking, for it seems almost human in its actions and rapidity of motion. The little arms are very sensitive, and the slightest deflection or irregularity in a rail is recorded perfectly and instantly, much more quickly than the human hand could accomplish the same result. Not only one, but many of the little arms are working at the same time, so that on the strip of paper twenty-three inches wide more than a dozen records are being made as the strip passes along underneath the little glass pens which tell the truth silently by the zig-zag lines in blue and red.

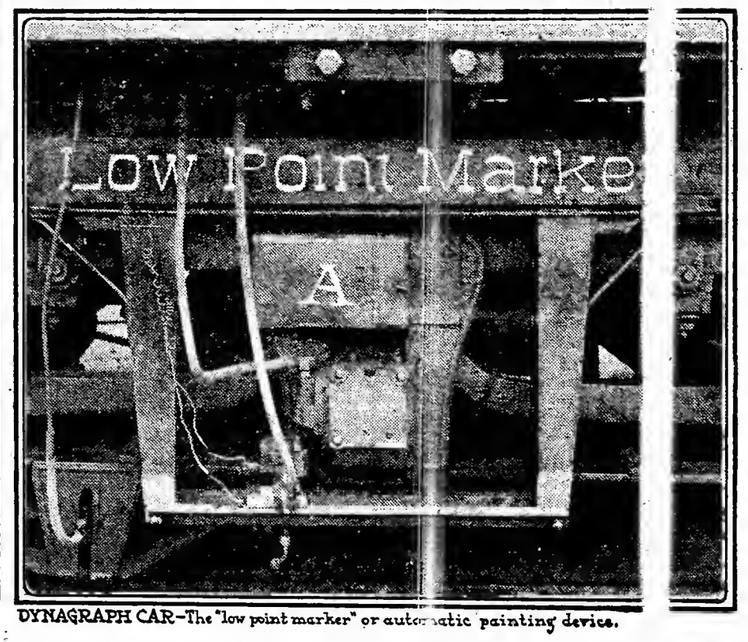
Often a section of track and ties will be depressed by a train passing over it, but will spring back into place again after being relieved from the weight. These depressed places cause the train to jump when running at high speed, and often such a deflection is the cause of an accident where a train jumps the track. It is difficult for the section gangs to detect these places, as the elasticity of the rails lifts the sleepers up to meet with other parts of the track. The point marker is the automatic detector of these defects, and directly the car passes over such a place the paint brush is set against the side of the rail, the compressed air operates on the paint tank, and the entire is smeared along the tread of the car for the entire length of the depression, while the car is going along at the rate of twenty-mile rate of speed. Should this automatic painter fail to work instantly an electric detector in the car signals its failure.



DYNAGRAPH CAR—The "low point marker" or automatic painting device.

Dr. Dudley has invented every part of this wonderful car, as well as many instruments for testing pertaining to railroads.

He can tell the elasticity of rails, sleepers, and beds of ashes, cinders, sand, stone ballast, or other materials that are used to fill in around wood or metallic sleepers. From years of experience he has found that stone ballast and 100-pound rails are the best and most economical for railroads. The expense has prevented many of the smaller and less wealthy roads from using them heretofore, but they will eventually come to it, as the heavy rail vibrates less, and the smooth running train rocks, joggles, and jumps less on this sort of a track and roadbed than on any other.

These solid roadbeds and rails are a pleasure to ride on, and during the past quarter of a century it has been largely due to the efforts of Dr. Dudley that the trunk lines have adopted this expensive equipment, for in the end it is the best and least expensive, as there is a great saving in both track and rolling stock.

One visitor asked what a hundred-pound rail is, thinking perhaps that was the weight of the entire rail. By the term "hundred-pound rail" is meant the weight of a section of rail three feet long, without holes bored in it for fishplates or connections, thus making a sixty-foot rail weigh just a ton of 2,000 pounds; not a long ton.

One very interesting appliance is the instrument for testing the spring or elasticity of a rail which is propped up on piers that support it at the ends. The instrument is placed at the middle of the rail over a weight of five hundred or one thousand pounds, and will record the millionth part of an inch. This can be figured down so the elasticity can be given to the running foot.

Another wonderful instrument is the "stremmatograph," by means of which the elasticity of a rail can be recorded in so short a space as the distance between sleepers. The record is made on a thin strip of highly polished bronze, and is so fine that a powerful microscope is employed to detect the line and measure the deflection, which it will do to the millionth of an inch if necessary.

These and other instruments have required years of labor and study to perfect, and they are the only ones in existence.

The cost of this car and its equipment represents the investment of a small fortune, as it figures at something like $100,000 for its construction, mechanical devices, scientific instruments, and furnishing. It is finished in solid mahogany, fitted with Westinghouse air brakes, and only the very highest grade of material employed in car building was used in its construction.

This unique car is the property of Dr. Dudley and is not controlled by any railroad company. It goes all over the lines when ordered to do so, and reports are made of the condition of each one, irrespective of others.

During the years of its travels many thousands of rolls of records have been made on the dynagraph, for which the railroad companies have paid handsomely, for by these reports corrections and repairs have been made that otherwise might have resulted in accident or loss of life that would have cost the companies hundreds of thousands of dollars. Unsafe conditions of a road are the greatest menace to a corporation, and often the dynagraph car will detect these conditions that are beyond the human eye to see, and would be overlooked in the ordinary repairs to a road.

SUTHERLAND'S FAMOUS "EATING HOUSE"--ITS PATRONS AND PROPRIETOR

JOHN SUTHERLAND died on Tuesday, Oct. 3, at the house on Euclid Avenue, Hackensack, N. J., to which he retired some years ago. He was 82 years old and had been in this country for about fifty years. He was a born Scotchman who had lived for some time in the North of England and had kept or had been connected with a tavern in York before he emigrated.

His first engagement in this country was as barkeeper for Lorenzo Delmonico, in the original downtown Delmonico's, at Beaver and William Streets, or possibly on the site of what was afterward the Stevens House, on Bowling Green. After serving his apprenticeship there, he concluded that there was an opening for a restaurant on purely British lines and proceeded to open one in Pine Street. He never called it a restaurant; even in the City Directory it was an "eating house," and a wonderfully good eating house of its kind it was and continued to be for more than forty years. In the late 50s and the early 60s he used to advertise "English Mutton" in THE NEW YORK TIMES once a week or so, as the steamers arrived that brought it in, and attracted to himself a clientele at first of the Britons who hankered after the flesh pots of their native Egypt and afterward of the Americans who found out that British cookery, as Sutherland knew how to do it, was an extremely good thing.

After ten years or so in Pine Street he removed his place to Liberty Street, a few doors east of Broadway, the "Sutherland's" of this generation, where it specdily became a favorite resort for the midday meal and for the evening dinner of a certain number of New Yorkers who knew a good thing when they tasted it. Among these, in the latter days of the establishment, were Charles Tiffany, the head of the house of Tiffany & Co.; Chester A. Arthur until his election to the Vice Presidency, and even afterward; that great gastronome, Sam Ward, who always maintained that the best eating and drinking in the world were to be had at "John's"; William Henry Hurlbert, and Louis J. Jennings, when he was the editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES. Much more, the wandering Briton, the distinguished and distinguishing Briton, was quite sure to be a guest at Sutherland's. It was a great resort of Lord Dufferin, when he was Viceroy of Canada, on his visits, incognito, to the metropolis, and of Lord Rosebery on his visits to this country. There was always the best that two continents could afford. English mutton lost some of its pre-eminence as American growers in Virginia and elsewhere learned to rival it, but Southdown and even Welsh mutton, which Sutherland always enthusiastically maintained to be the best in the world, were to be had so long as he was there. He even tried, and with some success, to prove that British sole, British turbot, and Irish oysters would bear transportation. Scotch grouse and moor fowl were to be had in their season. One of the distinctions of the place was curry, especially curried lobster, which was greatly relished even by experienced Anglo-Indians who resorted to Sutherland's. It was always made with a curry powder obtained, curiously enough, from Edinburg, which John maintained to be the supreme condiment in that kind.

For many years the annual Burns dinner was held at Sutherland's and consisted not only of "haggis" and "puddings," black and white, of Caledonia produced in great perfection, but also of mighty joints after the British use. The accommodation of the Banquet Hall, which was merely the second floor of the restaurant, was limited to 50 or 60, and the real Sutherland dinners were dinners in a "little committee" with the giver of the feast, literally, "tables of the host," presided over and carved by the great John himself. He was deeply learned in things to eat and things to drink and his discourses upon them were as edifying in their way as the viands were in theirs. He was a publican, who on such occasions recalled Sbenstone's quatrain:

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his footsteps may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
His warmest welcome at an inn—

Globe trotters who have conscientiously gastronomized the planet have been heard to affirm that they were never so well fed as at Sutherland's.

The host was a bachelor and lived on the top floor of the building, of which the two lower floors were the "eating house," open to the public. On the top floor there was a dining room, reserved for very special and private occasions, and in the rear the bedroom and sitting room of the proprietor, where he lived like a transplated Tim Linkinwater, surrounded by cages full of various birds, in which he took a great interest and about which he knew a great deal. He was also as much of a naturalist as his business required. On the ground floor were two large colored charts, showing, respectively, the edible and the poisonous fungi, and it gratified John to serve an unknown fungus which his guests found delicious, and to discourse upon the waste of good food through sheer ignorance. He was already more than a septuagenarian when he retired from business to Hackensack, though for some years he continued to revisit his ancient haunt, and, having no longer any proprietary responsibility, ingratiated himself with the waiters, whose terror he had so long been and who had been accustomed to "tremble with fear at his frown."

He had been in his landlord time a fierce disciplinarian, and the presence of the most distinguished guests could not prevent him from bullying the unlucky attendant who had made a slip in his services. One of many anecdotes, setting forth his strictness, is of the unhappy waiter who, laden with dishes, stumbled at the top of the little spiral staircase at the back of the ground floor and circling the newel post, came to the ground with a fearful crash of crockery. John, who, aproned, was carving cold beef at the front, went back to view the ruins, and on his return, being asked by a "consommateur" whether the waiter was hurt, replied, savagely: "I am afraid not."

He was, in sooth, and in spite of his Scottish origin, a typical John Bull, irascible, dogged, and prejudiced beyond belief. William Stuart, "Willie" Stuart, who had changed his name to O'Flaherty for reasons of a fled British justice, and who was as a guest was almost coeval with Sutherland's service as a publican, late many droll tales of the haunt. Many of them he may be suspected of having invented, but all "well found."

The New York police were the object of John's aversion, and when Stuart, when the first row broke out, Sutherland declared in my words. The New Yorker is the bottom of this thing." One of Stuart's was to the effect that he once invited Sutherland to at his place in New London, brought with him a most objectionable terrier, which proceeded to terrify the household. There was the way, in Liberty Street, these animals which were given dinner to scamper about. The fox terrier particularly had been made the subject of monstration by Stuart's friends, complained that the dog's weekly wash into lint, and stole chickens, to which he finally responded that it was a special object according to Sutherland: "Mark police are at another story that, when to visit him, Sutherland's obnoxious fox annoy and terrifies as always, by a kennel of released after dining room. In question of official servants, who worried the dog, moreover, Sutherland stout-servants who did these things and laid them at the dog's door. One afternoon Stuart happened to see the offending quadruped galloping across the lawn with a chicken in his mouth and called Sutherland's attention to this proof of the charges, but Sutherland, undaunted, stoutly maintained that it was the condemned servants who had put the chicken in the dog's mouth.

Although Sutherland was no politician his table was the resort of many conspicuous Republicans. In the days when Chester Arthur was boss of the organization in New York, and George Sharpo Speaker of the Assembly, and George Bliss the trustiest and foxiest of counselors; many "jobs" were concocted over the mahogany in Liberty Street. Especially was this the case when President Garfield's nomination of Judge Robertson to be Collector of the Port of New York split the Republican Party of the State asunder and "lined up" Conkling and all his henchmen against the Administration, and these three were to be seen there talking against the honor dons to the "Halfbreeds." The old hostelry was closed last Summer, and, as has been said, its founder had withdrawn from it years before. But the recollections of more than a generation will continue to linger around it in the memories of hundreds of New Yorkers.

M. S.

HE KNEW THE SUBJECTS.

IN a far western cañon, near the Mexican border, are four graves, the headboards marking them fashioned from the rough deals of a packing case. In the graves are buried three of a little party of seekers after gold, and one of a band of "greasers" from across the boundary who contested the American claim to the rich territory in the cañon.

The faulty orthography of the rudely carved epitaphs justifies the conjecture that the "Padder" on the first headboard is intended for "Padre"—a sobriquet sometimes bestowed in the lawless Southwest upon an abstemious comrade.

That the carver of the epitaphs entertained ideas as to the ultimate destination of his fallen companions, and that of the detested Mexican, is plain from the direction indicated by the index finger of the hand above the name on each board.

Tired of His Part.

Mother—What is all this fuss in the nursery about?

Paris, Sept. 26.

NEVER since the disastrous war with Germany in 1870 have Frenchmen criticised with keener attention the degree of efficiency of their soldiers than at the manoeuvres which have just come to an end at and around Chalons-sur-Marne. Nearly 100,000 men were engaged in the operations, so that within the limits of what mimic warfare can teach, a fair notion was obtainable of the value of the French Army as a whole. The recent dispute with Germany over Morocco has given intense interest to the question: "Is France ready for a great Continental war?" Then there was the comparison to be made with the German manoeuvres which are being carried out at the same time, with nearly the same number of men engaged. Different strategic methods were favored by the French and German General Staffs respectively. Which of them seemed most likely to justify itself in the event of actual warfare? And, finally, for France, but not for Germany, there was a grave political question.

For some months past the extreme section of the Socialist Party has been making violent attacks upon the army, not on account of its organization, but as an institution, arguing that armies should be abolished, that frontiers should be thrown down, that the children in the State schools should be taught that there is no such thing as mother country, and that patriotism is a delusion and a fraud. The mouthpiece of this sensational doctrine has been no less a personage than Jean Jaures, the great orator of the Chamber and formerly its Vice President. It has divided the Radical Party, for Senator Clémenceau has employed all his wondrous talent as a polemist and a public speaker to denounce it. But a group of schoolmasters throughout the country have adopted the theory and have even attempted to introduce it into the historical textbooks which they place in their youthful pupils' hands.

Added to this, there has been the bitter controversy over the methods of the late Minister of War, Gen. André, who was forced to resign on account of the tale-bearing practices between officers of different shades of political creed, which he admittedly encouraged. The pessimists in France declared that the army was going to the dogs, that its military spirit was broken, and it is more than likely that something of the fear engendered by this pessimism inspired M. Rouvier in his recent "climb-down" with respect to the German claims in Morocco.

The manoeuvres have done much to calm the alarmist feeling as to the condition of the French Army, which was becoming general. In the unanimous opinion of all the competent critics, including Gen. Chaffee, the French soldier, amply proved that he has lost none of the briskness, suppleness, and enthusiasm for which he has been famous ever since the first uniformed regiments were enlisted under Louis XIII. He is still probably the finest marcher in the world, and, notwithstanding the fifty pounds of kit which he carries, the "military etape," or day's march of forty kilometers, or twenty-five miles, leaves him perfectly fresh and in good spirits, while his forced marches, which occasionally reached thirty-five miles in a day, and the style in which he did them, aroused the wonder of the foreign onlookers.

The German infantry soldier is almost as good on the march, but the German cavalry is admitted on all sides to be inferior to the French cattle and horsemanship. The French artillery is also superior to that which the Germans employ in their manoeuvres. The French quick-firing gun is now entirely without recoil, and can be fired for practically an unlimited length of time without readjustment of sight. The Germans used in their manoeuvres a Krupp gun, which, though it has little or no recoil, jumps a great deal each time it is fired, so that the aim is necessarily not so good. But it is believed that the German artillery will soon be armed with a new gun, three specimens of which made a startling apparition this year at the Sedan review, and which are believed to be a close reproduction of the French model.

Modern French tactics are based on the principle of the economy of forces. The German General Staff holds to the Napoleonic theory of throwing as large a force as possible of all arms against the enemy at once. Thus the French, when they are attempting an enveloping movement, send forward their artillery in rapid successions of batteries; the Germans swoop down on the enemy with all their batteries at once. Only an actual battle can demonstrate which is the more effective method.

On both sides the Commissariat Departments worked remarkably smooth. The French soldier carries most necessary cooking utensils with him, so that even if separated from comrades he will be able to prepare himself a sufficient meal. The German is somewhat less heavily burdened in this respect, but their greater weight of intrenching tools makes up the difference. The German system of signaling by soldiers who with the long thin wooden bats make figures of letters in the air, and transmit messages, works sufficiently well to have aroused the admiration of the envy of the French military observers who without doubt will be introduced into the French Army without delay.

A Conclusion.

Willie—If the eel is an eel he must be in a good humor.

Papa—Why do you think so?

Willie—Why, because he is always wagging himself like a dog's tail.

A SHOCK IN STORE FOR THEM.

AFTER Dec. 1 of this year druggists who sell certain patent medicines which have whisky or other distilled spirits as the chief ingredient will be obliged to pay a special tax to the Government. Some of the worthy members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, says The Medical Record, will be surprised when they learn that their favorite nerve tonic and all-round bracer is nothing but whisky, and bad whisky at that.

Consumption of Tobacco Increasing.

Internal revenue statistics show that the consumption of tobacco is increasing in the United States. In the year ended June 30, tax was paid on 7,589,337,200 cigars and 3,376,633,673 cigarettes. The year previous, 185,000,000 less cigars and 142,000,000 less cigarettes were manufactured.

Are the Doctors Disappearing?

During the year ended June 30, 1905, there were 26,147 students attending the 157 medical colleges of the United States. Of this number, 5,606 were graduated. The previous year there were 1,995 more students and 141 more graduates.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

THE glorious weather of the past week has been the delight of those who are living in the suburbs. It is a bit too early to talk of much that is going on in town. A few houses have been opened and there is a constant movement to and from New York by those who have properties within a hundred miles or so of Fifth Avenue. The Adirondacks are in their full beauty, the forests one mass of red and gold, and the foliage is scarcely less resplendent in the woods of the Berkshire Hills. It is a time to be in the open and riding to hounds, playing tennis or golf, motoring or coaching. The playhouses in town are well patronized, and many familiar faces are seen at the restaurants and the fashionable shops. There is something delightfully unsettled about it all, informal and jolly, which gives this Autumn life a charm all its own.

The races at Belmont Park have been one of the attractions. The coaching there, the Enterprise of Robert L. Gerry, is well booked until the end of the season. There are yet a few of the faithful at Newport, and Mrs. Vanderbilt has been giving a series of house parties at The Breakers. Mrs. Vanderbilt captures all the traveling lions, and the list of her guests is not without its weekly soupçon of diplomacy, literature, and art. The Hudson has Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Archibald Rogers, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, and others as representative hostesses. Up at Highland Falls Miss Anne Morgan has been entertaining for Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, and the Bigelows are at their country place, where a visit from the newly married pair, the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Guest, is expected. Idle Hour receives Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt on Long Island, and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay at Harbour Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney at Wheatley Hills. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Willets, August Belmont, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin D. Morgan, and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer are among those who have been entertaining. The Duchess of Marlborough, who has had a pied à terre at Brockholst, the villa of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, has been visiting all around. She is now at Elm Court at Lenox, where Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sloane are having a large house party to meet her. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., will entertain for her this week, and she is expected to be at the Pulitzer-Webb wedding.

Saturday, Oct. 14, is the date set for the wedding of Ralph Pulitzer and Miss Frederica Webb, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb. There will be a large house party at Shelburne Farms itself, and the smaller residence, or farmhouse, as it is called, will be occupied by the Pulitzer family, while the Elfrida, the Webb yacht, will serve as bachelor quarters. The yacht is anchored in Lake Champlain. A special train with the guests of the wedding party will leave town on Friday night, Oct. 13. Miss Webb has chosen as her bridesmaids Miss Wenonah Wetmore, whose engagement to A. L. Devens has recently been announced, and Miss Edith Pulitzer, a débutante of next Winter and a sister of the bridegroom. Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., will be his brother's best man, and the ushers will be from his classmates at Harvard. They are Phoenix Ingraham, Duncan Harris, Charles D. Draper, Nicholas Biddle, Otway Byrd, and Watson Webb. There will be a numerous assemblage of family relatives, including the Duchess of Marlborough, Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt, and Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly and Miss Twombly.

The wedding of the week was that of Miss Alice Babcock and Henry R. Winthrop at Stow House. There was some excitement over the non-appearance of James Hazen Hyde, who was to have been one of the ushers. Mr. Hyde has been at Newport. That he kept away from the wedding in order not to enter the State of New York was no surprise to the party at Stow House. Mr. Hyde will spend a part of the Winter abroad.

Another wedding last week was that of Miss Lulu Pfizer and Capt. Spencer E. Holland, which took place at St. George's Church on Thursday. Miss Pfizer is well known in the Bernardsville colony and at Newport. She had chosen for her bridesmaids Miss Evelyn Bigelow, daughter of Mrs. E. Jaffray Bigelow; Miss Claire Frewen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moreton Frewen and niece of Mrs. George Cornwallis West, formerly Lady Randolph Churchill, who was Miss Jerome; Miss May Parsons, and Miss Beatrice Bellinger, all well known in New York. Miss Nancy Leischman, the little daughter of the American Minister to Turkey and sister of the Countess Gontaut Biron, was the flower girl.

There have been several interesting engagements announced. One of these was that of Mrs. Marie Eustis and Josef Hoffman, the young pianist. Mrs. Eustis is a daughter of the late James B. Eustis, Ambassador to France. She was born in New Orleans and her mother was a Miss Buckner of that city. As Miss Marie Eustis, Mrs. Eustis was a belle in New Orleans society. She is accomplished, an excellent pianist and musician, and a clever and well-read woman, with great charm of manner. She was married, when young, to her cousin, George Peabody Eustis, whose mother was a Miss Corcoran of Washington, only daughter of the banker and philanthropist. The marriage did not prove a happy one, and Mr. and Mrs. Eustis sought the relief of the divorce court a few years ago. Mrs. Eustis has lived at Westbury in the Autumn and has, like other members of her family, been identified with the Aiken colony. In fact, it was the family of the late George Eustis, her uncle and her husband's father, who really discovered Aiken. The Eustis children, after the death of their parents, passed their Winters there in a private Southern home with their aunt, Miss Celestine Eustis. Mrs. Eustis has two brothers, James Eustis, who married Miss Crosby, and Newton Eustis, who is unmarried, and a married sister. She is a cousin and sister-in-law of Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., and also a cousin of Mrs. Kinen and Miss Lydia Eustis of Paris. The Eustis family is one of the most notable and aristocratic in Louisiana, and Chief Justice Eustis, who lived on the old Dubroca plantation, so charmingly pictured in Miss Celestine Eustis's little book, was over a half century ago one of the great men of the South.

The granddaughter of the late Pierre Lorillard, Miss Emily Taylor, is to be married shortly to Ernest A. Wiltsee of this city. Miss Taylor made her début three years ago at a ball given by her grandmother, Mrs. Pierre Lorillard. She is the daughter of the late Stuart Taylor of San Francisco, and a strikingly beautiful girl. Mr. Wiltsee is from Dutchess County, and is a large owner of mines in Mexico and California. The wedding will take place on Wednesday, Oct. 18, in Paris, where Mrs. Taylor is living at 16 Rue Greuze. Mr. and Mrs. Wiltsee will live in New York.

Stuyvesant Le Roy is to go to Switzerland for the Winter. He spent last Winter in the Adirondacks. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer will be in Rome by December. Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer H. Brooks have opened their house at Westbury, having closed their Newport villa for the season. Mr. and Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt are among those who will constitute the large house party given by Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane for the Duchess of Marlborough. The guests began to assemble at Elm Court, Lenox, on Thursday. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont have postponed their Hot Springs visit until Oct. 22, in order to be with the Duchess of Marlborough until she sails for the other side. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Leeds are to arrive at Hot Springs next week. Adrian Iselin and the Misses Iselin have left there and have gone to New Rochelle for the Autumn.

There will be a few weddings in town in the next two weeks. Of prospective entertainments the two concerts to be given at Ardsley and the over-week affairs at Tuxedo and other nearby resorts will fill the list. W. Gould Brokaw has arranged to give his Nirvina Steeplechase on Election day. In this event there will not be a repetition of the pony races which are usually arranged by the Meadow Brook Club on that day. Saturday will be of interest to the Long Island colony on account of the motor races, and there are to be local horse shows and amusements of this kind at various points, and hunt breakfasts and meets in the different hunting neighborhoods. Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman will not arrive at Goshen until the end of the month, but will be in time for a hunt ball and also for the annual dance at Tuxedo, which will take place as in other years on the last day of the month.

The list of well-known English people and foreigners at present visiting the "States" continues to grow. Lord Vivian is here, going to the West to shoot big game. Lady Sophie Scott, daughter of Lord Cadogan, sailed last week from New York. She had been in this country for some time, and has made a number of friends here. Viscount and Viscountess Maitland and Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Martineau have sailed from Southampton. They are to go to Canada, and will come to this city in time for the Horse Show. Lady Maitland was here last year. Lady Harcourt is at Newport with Mrs. T. Shaw Safe. Mr. and Mrs. George Charles Montagu sailed last week for England. They will live a short distance from London, where they have a pretty home. From London come cheering reports of the condition of Mrs. Arthur Paget, who had to submit to another operation a fortnight ago, and of Mrs. Chauncey, who had a severe attack of influenza, and was prevented, in consequence, from joining Lady Fitzwilliam's party at Wentworth Wood House.

James Henry Smith is to be in New York shortly. Last week he was at Claridges. Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies was one of the arrivals of the week, and there also came over Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson. Mrs. Baylies has been visiting in Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Meyer Johnson and Miss Ruggles arrived, and went to their country seat at Islip, Long Island. They have been on the Continent and in England during the Summer. J. J. Van Alen was in London last week, and Captain and Mrs. De Witt C. Falls and Mr. and Mrs. Jules Neilson were also in that city. Mr. and Mrs. Neilson went to Scotland. Mrs. Belle Neilson will arrive in New York this month.

A wedding of much interest to Americans will take place in London in November. It is that of William Walsh, Lord Ormawaite's younger son, to Lady Nora Churchill. Mr. Walsh has been adopted by this country, as he has been appointed private secretary to Whitelaw Reid, the American Ambassador. This is the first instance of such a post having been given to an Englishman. Mr. Walsh was formerly secretary to the Earl of Derby. It is true that a private secretary has nothing to do with diplomatic affairs, and Mr. Reid, who entertains a great deal, is in need of a major domo. Mr. Reid will entertain in London on a scale which has never before been attempted by any American representative there. He may, however, not retain Dorchster House for next season. At present Mr. and Mrs. Reid and Miss Reid are at their country seat, which is one of the most beautiful near London. Lady Nora Churchill is a near relative of the Duke of Marlborough.

Another London wedding which will shortly be celebrated will be that of R. Roberts of this city and Miss Maud Sullivan, daughter of the late Sir Edward Sullivan, who was a journalist of some repute.

W. Bayard Cutting, Jr., and Lady Sibyl Cutting are planning to sail shortly to spend the Winter in Switzerland. Mr. and Mrs. Luther Kountze and Miss Kountze arrived last week from abroad. They have gone to their country seat, near Bernardsville. Miss Kountze will be a débutante of the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer of Philadelphia, who are are well known in New York, have gone abroad for the Winter. With them are Miss Mary Astor Paul and James W. Paul. Miss Paul is to visit her cousin, Mrs. Spender Clay, and also her uncle, W. W. Astor, in England. Mr. and Mrs. John Cadwallader and the Misses Cadwallader have arrived for the season. They have been abroad all Summer. On the same ship were Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Weir and Sir William Des Voeux and Lady Mabel Hall. Lady Mabel King Hall is the wife of the commander of the British cruiser Cumberland, one of the fleet which Prince Louis of Battenberg is bringing here. She will be the guest of Col. Robert M. Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. Pell.

A Legal Quilliet.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

MRS. BURKE-ROCHE, a picture of whom is seen in the Pictorial Supplement, is well known as one of the prominent society women devoted to horses, and as an exhibitor at the New York, Newport, and other fashionable horse shows.

Mrs. Roche is generally admitted to be a decidedly handsome woman. She is of middle height, full figure, and has dark brown hair, dark blue eyes, and pronounced features. She was Miss Fannie Work, a daughter of Frank Work. She married James Burke-Roche, an Englishman, whose brother was Lord Fermoy of the Irish Peerage. The union was not a happy one, and after living some time abroad, Mrs. Burke-Roche returnd to this country, and taking up her residence in Delaware, procured a divorce. Since then she has lived with her father, Mr. Work, having with her her three children, Miss Cynthia Roche and her sons. In the garden of Elm Court, the Work cottage at Newport, Mrs. Burke-Roche has a flower garden in which all the flowers are blue. She is a sister of Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt.

Mrs. E. Lyttleton Fox, a picture of whom may be found in the Pictorial Supplement, was Miss Genevieve O'Brien, a daughter of Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, and a niece of John D. Crimmins, Sr. She attended the same school as Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt. Her marriage to Edward Lyttleton Fox, son of Mrs. Edward C. Fox, was celebrated some days ago at Rose Crest, Judge O'Brien's country place at Good Ground, L. I.

Mrs. Whitney Lyon, a picture of whom appears in the supplement, is to give an automobile euchre at her Summer home at Larchmont on Thursday for the benefit of the Free Industrial School for Crippled Children. Twenty-five automobiles are to start from the Ansonia apartment hotel at 1 o'clock with guests for the game at Mrs. Lyon's out-of-town home. Mrs. Lyon is a hospitable woman, and her city residence is on Riverside Drive.

Mrs. James M. Waterbury, who is also depicted in the pictorial section, was before her marriage Miss Kate Furman. The home of the Waterburys is Spencer House, at Westchester, but they spend much time in the cold months at Aiken, S. C. Mrs. Waterbury's daughter, Miss Elsie Waterbury, married Gouverneur Morris several months ago. The two elder sons of Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury—Lawrence Waterbury, who married Miss Maude Hall, a niece of President Roosevelt, and James M. Waterbury—are well-known polo players.

About fifteen years ago Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury gave an amateur circus on the grounds of their Westchester County place that became famous, and which no entertainment of the kind or any other in the way of an outdoor affair has even approached.

Lady Essex, who was Miss Adele Grant, daughter of Mrs. Beach Grant of New York, is visiting in Scotland. She is the second wife of Lord Essex, whom she married in 1893. At one time when she wae very young she was engaged to Lord Garmoyle, now Lord Cairns The engagement was a brief one. Lady Essex is one of the handsomest of the American girls who have married titles. She has a pale, creamy skin, large dark eyes and dark hair. She is said to have been the model for Herkomer's well-known painting entitled "A Lady in White." Lord and Lady Essex have two children, Lady Iris and Lady Joan Capell, who spend most of their lives in the country. Their ages are ten and six respectively.

Lady Donegall, who was Miss Violet Twining of Halifax, Nova Scotia, is staying in Ireland. Her little son, the Marquis, is nearly two years old. The marriage of Miss Twining in 1902 to old Lord Donegall, then eighty, caused much astonishment at the time. Lord Shaftesbury is the possessor of the greater part of the late Lord Donegall's estates, but Lady Donegall has a comfortable fortune, and her son has inherited a property in Antrim.

Lady Donegall is slight and dark, with a pale complexion and fine features. She is a musician, and plays the piano with more than ordinary skill.

Lady Breadalbane, who recently published her book on "Horse Breaking," is not only well versed in horse lore, but is also a crack rifle shot and keen at fishing. She is also a good conversationist, and is well read. She is a fair, handsome woman who dresses well and whose jewels are superb. Formerly she entertained admirably at Harcourt House in Cavendish Square—the Hexham House of "Lothair"—but that has been sold and Lord Breadalbane has purchased another in Ennismore Gardens.

A good story is told in connection with a remarkable costume worn by Arthur Roberts, the English comedian, in a musical piece at the Prince of Wales's Theatre. The costume was a frock suit of dark brown color having narrow white stripes. A visitor from one of the British colonies visited the theatre and was so taken with the suit that he wrote the actor asking if it was the latest thing in London fashions.

Mr. Roberts replied that it was, only a still smarter touch was to have broader stripes and rolled back cuffs of brown velvet.

A few days after writing this letter Mr. Roberts, walking along Bond Street, chanced to see coming rapidly toward him a tall, strong looking man with a very angry countenance; his garb was suggestive of a zebra's skin. Back of him trailed a party of small boys, enthusiastically counting the stripes in his clothes and making loud comments on its style, while well-dressed promenaders of that smart thoroughfare were staring at him in manifest astonishment.

Mr. Roberts turned suddenly down a side street and made his escape. That same night he received a note from the admirer of his striped costume complaining that, although he had walked fashionable streets, he had seen nothing like the clothes he had had made on Mr. Roberts's advice.

As the actor was to leave town the following day on a long holiday, he wrote the admirer of his stage dress that if he would promenade Hyde Park the following afternoon in his striped suit he would find himself quite the thing.

The result of any excursion to Hyde Park, however, has never become known.

Among the owners of rare violins is Lady Lamington, who was the Hon. Mary Hozier and a daughter of Lord Newlands. She possesses an Amati and a valuable Stradivarius, both gifts to her from her father. She plays the violin very well, and is especially fond of dogs and horses. When her husband, Lord Lamington, was in Australia she had her only son taught to ride in bush fashion, barebacked. This son, by the way, was a godson of the late Queen and was named Victor after her, while the name of Brisbane was also added to it in honor of Australia, where his birth occurred.

Lord and Lady Lamington were married about 1890. Lord Lamington has been Governor at Bombay, and again in Queensland. In Australia Lady Lamington founded a women's hospital at Brisbane, and at a ball given in its aid she went frocked as a hospital nurse. She attended lectures on nursing and won a prize at the ambulance examination. Both took great interest in the black natives, and one of them—a girl—was taken into the household, where she was trained into a most efficient maid.

FROCKS OF THE SEASON.

MRS. LAWRENCE WATERBURY and Mrs. Henry W. Bull were dining together some evenings ago at Sherry's and made a charming contrast, for Mrs. Waterbury, who was Miss Maude Hall, is a tall, very slight, pale blonde, and Mrs. Bull, who was Miss Maud Livingston, is a short, slight, and very dark brunette. Mrs. Waterbury was in white with touches of turquois blue, and Mrs. Bull was in coral color with bat to match.

Mrs. Waterbury's trailing white chiffon gown was full and clinging and was combined with the flower-figured chiffon, so often termed "hand painted."

The skirt trailed, was gathered full at the waist line and had a deep border some 10 inches broad of small flowers, chiefly pink on a white ground. It was a ribbon border with tucks above and below.

The bodice had a girdle of the flowered chiffon that formed nearly a third of its depth. This bodice was gathered in under the girdle and also rather full around the shoulders. It was cut away slightly at the top and a stock of white lace and chiffon with a shallow guimpe attached was worn. Outlining the bodice where it outlined the guimpe was a fold of turquois blue that described a V in the front. If memory serves aright she also wore a short string of turquois beads about her neck. The moderately full gathered and puffed sleeves ended at the elbows in frills and a fold of blue was around each elbow.

Mrs. Bull's coral-colored gauze was cut out somewhat in the neck, a style she is fond of, and a round or Dutch guimpe of filmy lace inserted. It had elbow sleeves and the skirt had a double jupe effect given to it by a three-inch puff of the material arranged in curious lines rising from the back to the front. Her large coral-colored hat drooped on the left and rose at the right with ostrich plumes to match under the brim and a plume rested on the outside.

A beautiful Parisian gown for her wear only has recently arrived for a young and fashionable matron. The trailing skirt is formed of three overlapping bias flounces of rose-colored chiffon, each bordered with a two-inch band of lib satin of a slightly deeper shade, set on a foundation slip of a paler shade of pink liberty silk. The two lower flounces are each twelve inches wide, while the upper one, which forms the skirt proper, is really a huge circle with a section cut out in the centre the size of the waist, which closes down the back under a band of rose-colored satin that is carried from the bottom band to the waist line.

Over this pink chiffon skirt is worn a long, three-quarter fitting coat of lace, most of which is the so-called "baby" or fine variety. This has epaulets of the lace that extend some five inches over the sleeves. The sleeves are rose-colored chiffon, gathered in huge puffs and ending at the elbow in flounces of some sort of fine white lace. There are six-inch lace ruffles drooping toward the hands, and two-inch ruffles rising toward the shoulders and tacked in place; while between the two, twisted pink satin matching the bands on the flounces are twisted around and tied in perky little bows at the outside of the arm.

The coat fronts open down the centre to show a long semi-fitted waistcoat of white palest pink chiffon embroidered in small pink roses, and closing with tiny rhinestone buttons. This waistcoat extends some eight inches below the waist line. The side tops of the coat are separated from the body and, swinging loose at the centre bust line and from under the arms, droop single hemstitched ruffles of chiffon veiled with fine white lace and

Blue voile costume trimmed with medallions of embroidery with groups of knife-blade plaitings in blue silk crossed by blue velvet straps between the medallions.

The Countess Festetics of James B. Haggin, luncheon the other day with her mother, Mrs. Haggin, and niece, Mrs. Richard Lounsbery. Edith Lounsbery.

The Countess was frocked in a black voile costume, with white stock, guimpe and lower sleeves topped by a black hat.

The hat was decidedly Parisian in effect, and, unlike many of those having the exaggerated forehead the ultra-raised back, was an especially effective chapeau for its wearer. It was narrow in the front and tilted upward, rising at the sides to the back where it was of exaggerated height, but not stand out far, as do some of the latest and most outré of recent importations. Large, black ostrich plumes rising from the sides and drooping over the high back formed the only decoration.

The gown had a trail skirt having several deep tucks as trimming, and was gathered at the top. The bodice matched the skirt, and was cut at the top to show a round guimpe of white lace over chiffon. The sleeves of less than elbow length were gathered and had tucks giving a ruffle effect. undersleeves came nearly to the wrist were fluffy at their tops and scanty at the bottom.

Mrs. S. Osgood Pell, in restaurant, wore a quaint frock of gray silk having invisible stripes pinhead width. The trailing skirt was gathered at the top was joined to the bodice by a fine cord covered with the silk. The only trimming on the skirt is a seven-inch band of the silk turned up on the outside and headed by a half-inch side plaiting, also of the silk.

The bodice showed the silk drawn around the body over a light-fitting lining and fastened down the back. Two or three narrow folds or tucks of the silk with half-inch plaitings their tops were arranged on the upper half of the bodice and described shallow in the centre front. The elbow sleeves were small, scanty puffs, each having three inch-wide silk bands headed with half-inch side plaitings. The top band came just below the shoulder puff of each sleeve, holding it up and keeping it in place, the third at the elbow and the other way between these two band was worn around the arm, a full fluffy boa large, nearly flat, black ostrich plumes at the left topped with ostrich plumes.

Mrs. Algernon Boyesen, who is now wearing, among other gowns, a frock of gray trimmed with folds of pinch purple cloth velvet, matching the gown, bands of satin or who is tall and very slim, Mrs. Boyesen, trailing gowns, and this, usually wears to the rule. It was gathered was an exception around the waist and red full but flat lower part was encircled by several satin bands. The bodice had tight foundation over which was soft dull cloth wrapped in folds. There of the satin or panne were three bands truth, the writer was not to determine which it was velvet, to tell the arc in favor of velvet sufficiently near and which will be distinctly fashionable this Autumn and Winter, not only in whole gowns but as trimming. These bands formed a corset effect across the lower and middle of the bodice, holding the cloth fold in place. The sleeves, which were quite scant and ended at the elbows, each had several bands of the velvet around them. There was a stock and shallow guimpe of white lace. A hat of medium size ted forward and trimmed with ostrich tips—the whole matching the gown—to ed the frock.

A handsome toilet for illing, and which will be seen at several the coming-out teas for débutantes in November is of pale gray chiffon cloth and roadcloth of the same shade, decorated with embroidery and creamy lace.

The trailing foundation is of broadcloth. Six inches from its lower edge is a two-inch bias band of cloth, and eight inches above it is a second, a half inch narrower, while between the two and overlapped by the cloth bands is a flat puff of chiffon cloth. Just touching the top band comes the tunic or upper skirt of the sheer chiffon cloth. This is laid in narrow box plaits at the top, these graduating from an inch in width at the top to an inch and a half where they terminate. These plaits are stitched in, but the stitching stops some fifteen inches from the lower edge in front and some eighteen inches behind, and from its termination the cloth falls in full folds. A garland of embroidery done in shaded gray silk, chenille, and crystal beads is around this tunic some two inches from its edge.

There is a deep, pointed girdle of chiffon velvet of the same hue as the cloth, and above this the chiffon cloth bodice is gathered, the top being laid in box plaits stitched down some two inches below the shallow, round yoke of gray chiffon, the top of which is cut in a Dutch neck. This yoke has insertions of flowers in heavy ecru lace over lavender velvet. The elbow sleeves are large puffs of the chiffon—not chiffon cloth—over lavender silk, and seven-inch ruffles of heavy ecru lace droop over double ruffles of gray chiffon, having a box ruching of lavender tulle at the edge.

There is a little coat of chiffon broadcloth to be worn with this costume. It is really a loose sacque, the top of which is formed of a deep, square yoke of heavy ecru lace over broadcloth, and this has a narrow, turned-over collar of lavender chiffon velvet and a large rhinestone and amethyst cabochon closes it.

Just below this yoke there is an eight-inch flat puffing of gray chiffon over broadcloth, and then the entire lower part of the jacket is formed of the heavy lace set on over broadcloth and projecting an inch or so below the lower edges.

The coat fronts part a little, and the whole body comes just below the hip line. The sleeves are quite wide at the elbows, and are gathered in at the tops. The lower third is formed of a narrow, flat puff of chiffon, followed by deep flounces of the ecru lace over double flounces of chiffon.

A large, rather flat hat of dark-gray velvet, with a crown of lighter felt, is trimmed with encircling wreaths of shaded gray ostrich plumes that fall over the back.

Personality and Art on the Stage

Ignorance of Dramatic Technic and Its Effect on the Player---Tape-Measure Estimates of Histrionic Fitness---Carlotta Nillson's Versatility and Its Lesson.

IN ACTING, as in every other art, there are legitimate means of expression, which as often as not are ignored by the player, who proceeds happily and easily along the line of least resistance, this being very often in his case the line of theatrical trickery rather than of natural and fluent dramatic expression. In thus making the way easy for himself the actor is not without examples in other crafts. We have known water colorists, for instance, who found it easier to scratch through their tints to reveal a high light than to make the deft manipulation of pigments necessary to leave the white paper exposed. For persons uninformed as to technic the one method is, perhaps, as effective as the other, but the value of a work of art ought to be in some ratio to the difficulty of its accomplishment.

The general ignnrance of his art is dispiriting to the actor. But it is something more than that. It is an incentive to carelessness. There are at present on view in our theatres pronounced examples of theatrical trickery indulged in by men whose experience and knowledge of the more legitimate means of expression cannot be doubted. One of the conspicuous offenders in this respect is William J. Ferguson, an actor who, when he chooses, is capable of very sound artistic achievement. In "The Walls of Jericho," however, he appears to have thrown discretion to the winds, probably proceeding upon the assumption that the Marquis of Steventon is such a very grotesque rôle in itself that it justifies almost any absurdity. We agree with the opinion that this titled gentleman is something of a monstrosity, and, if it is any satisfaction to Mr. Ferguson, we do not mind telling him that in the hands of the actor who played it in London the rôle appeared little less absurd. But this does not detract from the fact that Mr. Ferguson has become more and more addicted to the use of theatrical tricks, and that he has developed a tendency toward playing directly to and at his audience. This habit—a very bad one at all times—is possibly to be excused when an actor is playing in farce, but in a play of as much seriousness of matter and of purpose as "The Walls of Jericho" it is one that cannot be reformed too soon.

In addition to the fact that actors know that there is no very general knowledge on the subject, their art is hampered from at least two other sides. The modern system of exploiting personality lies at the basis of much of the trouble. When the production of a new play is contemplated, the manager looks about for players whose personal appearance and fitness for the individual parts have been previously demonstrated in rôles of a similar character. We have even known it to come to the point where an actor of very respectable talent has been denied an engagement because his face lacked a beard, the presence of such an adornment having been set down by the dramatist as an essential. It would be absurd, of course, to believe that in this age of proficiency in make-up such an objection could be often seriously urged, but that does not in the least detract from the actual truth that an actor's appearance does count for a very great deal with respect to his progress. To an extent this is as it should be. The purpose of the stage is largely pictorial, and ability on the part of the artist to realize a definite physical impression must have consideration. But no judgment of capacity on the basis of inches is to be implicitly trusted. The largest mentalities of the theatre have frequently been manifested in men of apparently small physical equipment, and a casual survey of the stage to-day will reveal the fact that a number of the finest artists among our players are those who a few years ago might have been held unfit for great accomplishment by reason of the fact that they lacked a desired few inches. The application of the tape measure, however, does not occur as often in the case of the women as of the men. But it is a well-known fact among actors that the small men encounter difficulties in the race for employment. This is the more remarkable when one remembers that from Garrick down the greatest actors have frequently been described as lacking in the larger physical endowment. In the case of Richard Mansfield we have a striking modern example of the fallacy of the ordinary method of selection. All of which simply goes to prove the simple axiomatic proposition that brains and brawn are in no wise synonymous. Occasionally an actor is able to triumph over the prejudice, but many a capable artist has been doomed to lifelong disappointment by reason of it.

The application of this principle of selection goes further and is of broader significance than is ordinarily believed to be the case. An actor or an actress happens to be selected to play a certain rôle because of a supposed natural fitness for it. Success in that particular instance results in stamping the particular player's individuality not only on that rôle, but upon every succeeding one which is construed to bear a relation to it. As a result we find our theatres filled with one-part actors, or, at any rate, with actors, supposedly fitted for only one line of parts. And in this attitude toward the artists the manager is to a great extent encouraged by that of the public.

Were there a more general appreciation of acting, AS ACTING, the artist who attempted to broaden the scope of his impersonations would not be so often met with discouragement. But the public never having learned how to consider the actor as an artist resents such an effort on his part. The person, not the artist, is worshipped in our playhouses. Were this not true we would have fewer handmade stars and more of genuine achievement. In Paris, in Berlin, and in many other European cities there are theatres where frequent changes of bill necessitate variety of effort on the part of the actors. We, too, have had our stock companies from time to time—excellent organizations, such as the ones at the old Lyceum and Empire—but, even in those cases, the necessity for continuing a success until the last vestige of popularity had been wrung from it resulted in an indelible stamping of individualities rather than any development of breadth and versatility of accomplishment.

One of the conditions of the system of long runs in the theatre is the absence of opportunities by means of which the public may develop a knowledge and appreciation of what is really an actor's scope.

The condition as it exists has come about naturally enough, to be sure. There has probably never been a time when our pieces were as well played generally as is the case to-day. The very fact that the actor's engagement is surer and that the continuance of a play is likely to be longer as a result of the co-operation of producers and booking managers permits of a more lavish expenditure than was ever possible before. But these very conditions serve to limit the capacity of the individual to sharply marked confines.

We are impelled to these remarks in the presence of an exhibit which, because it provides the exception to the rule, serves none the less to illustrate the evils of its general application. Few persons, we imagine, would have credited Carlotta Nillson with the possession of such an exceptionally fine ability along comedy lines as she reveals in "The Man on the Box" at the Madison Square Theatre. If Mr. Lawrence had done nothing more than provide Miss Nillson with the opportunity to demonstrate her versatility in this instance he would still be entitled to the gratitude of every person who looks upon the players and their work as worthy of serious consideration. "The Man on the Box" is not a very proficient specimen of stagecraft, and the fact that it provides an evening of fairly good entertainment is chiefly due to the efficiency of Miss Nillson. She has apparently overcome in this case more than the ordinary share of difficulties—difficulties which have been simply a logical outcome of the system of selection to which we refer, and the general attitude of the public toward those whom it chooses to regard as its favorites. Temperamentally and in appearance Miss Nillson is distinctly the type of emotional actress, and as a result there has been an inclination to assign her to rôles for which she seemed naturally adapted. The public viewing her thus had come to look upon her as a woman capable of but one phase of successful effort, and it is a plausible assumption that she has been denied, more than once, the opportunities to demonstrate her fitness for other things. Were our producers inclined to consider personality less and experience and artistic fitness more, and were the public more appreciative of actual histrionic accomplishment, and less resentful to the players' departures from the beaten track, we would oftener have more varied and more satisfying achievement.

There can be no doubt that artistic values would be heightened by such inc: sed opportunities. The

The actor, on the other hand, is dependent first and last upon the combined patronage of the producing manager and the paying public. He may burn the midnight oil as much as he pleases, he may spend weary days and restless nights in the effort to ground himself in the manifold essentials of his calling, but unless he is provided with frequent occasion for giving utterance to his talent in the open theatre, with all the surrounding and supplementary factors of his craft, his talents cannot possibly ripen into maturity.

It was mighty ticklish work, and it was three days before we got to the top of the upper ball. Then the first thing we did was to fly Old Glory from the cross. When we came down to the street that night the police came up and jostled us about and said we must take that flag down. It gives the Russians false ideas of liberty and freedom to see the Stars and Stripes, at least the police think so.

"No, neither Hammond nor I has any fear of going up in the air. We were both sailors at one time, and my father was a sailor before me; so, naturally, I was used to high places long before I went into this business. It pays because there are few men who will do the things we do for so little money. In fact, they could not be paid to do some of the jobs we undertake."

An Alternative.

"When I get to heaven," said a woman to her Baconian husband, "I'm going to ask Shakespeare if he wrote those plays."

"Maybe he won't be there," was the reply.

"Then you ask him," replied the wife.

MUSICAL NEWS AND GOSSIP

THE list of new works that Mr. Gericke will play this season with the Boston Orchestra has been issued, but unfortunately with some of that carelessness that tends to warp the facts of history. Thus it is said that Sir Edward Elgar's overture, "In the South," is "quite new to America," and that "Psyche" is "an unknown work by César Franck." But Elgar's overture was played in New York by the New York Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 6, 1904, and "Psyche" is not wholly unknown, because the orchestral portions of it, without the chorus, were played by the Philharmonic Society on Jan. 30, 1903. The rest of the list is as follows: Elgar, "Chanson de Nuit," "Chanson de Matin"; Glazounow, symphonic poem, "The Kremlin"; Smetana, overture, "Libussa"; Mahler, Symphony No. 5; Ernst Boche, symphonic poem, "Odysseus's Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch"; Ferruccio Busoni, overture, "Lustspiel" and "Geharnischte Suite"; Amhurst Webber, symphony, E major; Frederick Converse, Ballad; Max Schillings, overture, "Der Pfeifertag"; John K. Paine, prelude, to "The Birds" of Aristophanes; Dvorak, symphonic poem, "Die Waldtaube"; Eugene d'Harcourt, overture, "Le Tasse." This list does not include novelties of the modern French school that will be played under the leadership of Vincent d'Indy.

The Philadelphia Orchestra of eighty musicians, under the direction of Fritz Scheel, will be heard in New York at Carnegie Hall on the evening of Nov. 6. The soloist will be Olga Samaroff, pianist. The band from Philadelphia visited New York in the Winter of 1902-1903 with Mark Hambourg as soloist, followed by a second visit with Mme. Melba in 1903-1904. Mr. Scheel has triple duties this season, having succeeded Frank Damrosch as leader of the Orpheus Club and the Eurydice Chorus.

Mme. Emma Eames is in Maine, where she is singing in festival concerts at Bangor and Portland. "This," says her press agent, "is her first visit to her native State in fifteen years." But as Mme. Eames was born in Shanghai, China, on Aug. 13, 1867, Maine can scarcely be called her "native State" by any strange wrench of the words. Her concert company will consist of Amhurst Webber, pianist; Josef Hollman, 'cellist; Emilio Gogorza, baritone. The first concert of the company will be given in Toronto on Oct. 13.

Mme. Samaroff, the pianist, was born in San Antonio, Texas, where her parents were living temporarily. They left that city when their daughter was six weeks old, and she has never had the opportunity to revisit her birthplace. Having been called a Russian, German, Frenchwoman, Pole, &c., Mme. Samaroff would like to state that she is American born of German descent, though she has no American relatives, educated at the Paris Conservatoire, afterward studying with the Russian teacher Jedlicska in Berlin. Though now considered a Russian subject on account of her marriage, she hopes at no distant date to secure her American citizenship.

Sam Franko has spent about three months in Europe. Part of this time was devoted to a search for interesting material for this season's concerts of old music, and the result will be heard at the series to be given on Thursday evenings at Mendelssohn Hall, Nov. 16, Feb. 1, and March 8. The second concert occurs in the week of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth, and Mr. Franko promises a programme of that master's music in honor of the anniversary.

The Adele Margulies Trio announces three chamber music concerts at Mendelssohn Hall on Friday, Dec. 8; Saturday, Jan. 13, and Saturday, Feb. 24.

Mme. Kirby Lunn, the English contralto, has just declined a three years' contract at the Royal Opera in Vienna, because of her present engagement at the opera in Budapesta her coming concert tour in this country commencing in December, and the renewal of her contract with the Covent Garden Syndicate in London for several years longer. Mme. Lunn will open her third tour here by singing with the Chicago Apollo Club in their "Messiah" performances, and doing the same work here with the Oratorio Society in Carnegie Hall on Dec. 27 and 28.

Fannie Bloomfield-Zeisler returned from Europe last week. She will give only one recital in this city, about the middle of March.

Four concerts will be given by the Olive Mead Quartet in Mendelssohn Hall Tuesday evenings, Nov. 14, Jan. 9, March 6, and April 3. Among the compositions to be presented will be Sinding, Quartet, op. 70; Taneiew, Quartet, op. 7; Piano Quartet by Lekeu.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season its usual two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, the first on Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15; the second on the Saturday afternoons of Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their seats by sending their applications to C. A. Ellis, box office, Carnegie Hall, accompanied by checks or money orders payable to C. A. Ellis. The regular sale of seats for new subscribers will open on Monday morning, Oct. 23, at the box office, Carnegie Hall; at Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices for each of the series will be the same as in past seasons. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will be under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. Among the soloists will be Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, Mr. Reisenauer, Miss Marie Hall, Harold Bauer, Henri Marteau, and Prof. Willy Hess.

Jan Kubelik, violin; Alfred Reisenauer, piano; Giuseppe Campanari, baritone; Rafael Joseffy, piano; Bessie Abbott, soprano; Rudolph Ganz, piano, and Charles M. Loeffler, viola d'amore, are among the soloists already engaged for the series of eight Sunday afternoon and eight Tuesday evening concerts to be given this season by the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, conductor. Mr. Damrosch will personally conduct twelve of these concerts and Felix Weingartner, who will visit this country as Mr. Damrosch's guest, will direct the other four. The first concerts will be Nov. 12 and 14, and at these Herr Reisenauer will play Liszt's concerto in A. Mr. Campanari, who has not sung in New York City for two years, will sing "The Legend of the Sage Bush" from Massenet's new opera, "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame." Mr. Joseffy will play for the first time in New York the first piano concerto of Brahms. Bessie Abbott is the American soprano who went abroad to study at the suggestion of Jean de Reszke, who became greatly interested in her progress. On completing her studies she was immediately engaged for the Grand Opéra, Paris. Of this she is still a member. Mr. Ganz's appearances will be on Feb. 4 and 6, under the direction of Weingartner. Mr. Loeffler will play the viola d'amore part in his own symphonic poem "Le Mort de Tintagiles." Loeffler, who is perhaps the most interesting of composers in this country, was a member of Dr. Leopold Damrosch's orchestra twenty-five years ago. He was then 18 years of age. George Barrere, the new flutist of the orchestra, will play a suite by Bach for flute and orchestra which has never been performed in this country. Each of the soloists mentioned will be heard at both a Sunday afternoon and a Tuesday evening concert.

David Bispham will again make a tour of the country, appearing in song festivals, including his "Cycle of Great Song Cycles."

Miss Elsa Ruegger, the young Belgian 'cellist, will revisit America, appearing in the larger cities, in December.

Examinations for admission to the People's Choral Union, Frank Damrosch director, will be held to-morrow evening, at the Choral Union office, 131 West Fourteenth Street. Applicants should present themselves on that evening, and will be required to show ability in reading music of the grade of the standard oratorios. The Choral Union will this season study, under Mr. Damrosch, the oratorio "St. Paul," in the large hall of Cooper Union Sunday afternoons. Good music students can avail themselves of this opportunity.

Raoul Pugno's first appearance with orchestra in this city will be with the Philharmonic Society in Carnegie Hall on Dec. 1 and 2. Previous to this M. Pugno is to give a series of piano recitals in Mendelssohn Hall.

Minnie Coons, a young American pianist who makes her first appearance here Nov. 2, will sail from Germany next week. Miss Coons has been abroad for the last five years, and her studies were made under the guidance of Xaver Scharwenka.

Henri Marteau, the violinist, who does not arrive in this country until January, is already booked with the leading orchestras and musical societies from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Up to the present time nine appearances are booked in New York City.

Miss Eugenie Wehrman, a young Southern pianist, will arrive in this city from Paris next week. Miss Wehrman is a native of New Orleans and is 19 years of age. She has given recitals in the South in the last two seasons. She will give a recital in this city in November.

THIS WEEK'S OFFERINGS

MRS. LESLIE CARTER IN A REVIVAL OF "ZAZA."

THOMAS JEFFERSON IN A REVIVAL OF "RIP VAN WINKLE,"

ELFIE FAY IN "THE BELLE OF AVENUE A," a musical comedy by Harry Williams and Aaron Hoffman, to-morrow evening at the Grand Opera House.

ARNOLD DALY IN "JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND," a comedy by George Bernard Shaw, Tuesday evening at the Garrick Theatre.

FLORENCE DAVIS IN "THE PLAYER MAID," a romantic play by Louise Malloy, at a special matinée Friday afternoon at the Hudson Theatre.

BERNARD SHAW'S new and unpublished play, "John Bull's Other Island," will be given for the first time in America next Tuesday evening at the Garrick Theatre by Arnold Daly and his company. This is nearly a week earlier than it was first intended to make the production, but circumstances made it possible to advance the premier.

As "John Bull's Other Island" is not yet in book form, the play may be said to be ringed about with question marks. What new principles and philosophy Mr. Shaw sets down in this new piece are the subject of much anticipation.

Mr. Daly, however, will not tell in advance. He wants the first night audience to come and be surprised. All that the young actor will say about "John Bull" is that Mr. Shaw sacrifices not one of his characteristic ideas, but presents them in a new and differently colored light.

The supporting company to Mr. Daly remains practically unchanged. Dodson Mitchell creates a very important rôle—in fact the management says it is more important than Mr. Daly's. Crystal Herne plays the leading female character, while John Findlay, George Farran, Winchell Smith, and Charles Crosby are all well cast.

Owing to the heaviness of the production the curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock.

A brief engagement begins to-morrow evening at Wallack's Theatre, when Thomas Jefferson makes his début in New York as Rip Van Winkle, succeeding his illustrious father in a rôle that is famous all over the country. There are but few New Yorkers who have not seen the late Joseph Jefferson in the rôle.

Thomas Jefferson has been acting Rip for several years, however, and is no novice in the part. For this present engagement he will be assisted by a company including Frank C. Bangs, Earl Western, Russell Bassett, Ethel Fuller, Viola Fluegarth, Leoni Flugarth, and Lauretta Francis. Charles B. Jefferson as manager will provide a suitable scenic setting for the play.

Mrs. Leslie Carter's first change of bill during her brief répertoire season at the Belasco Theatre comes to-morrow evening, when she begins a series of seven appearances as Zaza in David Belasco's version of that play. Mrs. Carter's original triumph in this play was of the most sweeping kind, and her reappearance in this rôle will doubtless be the occasion of capacity houses for a week to come. The rôle gives her opportunity for comedy, and great opportunities to display her powers of emotion. After the seven performances in this play Mrs. Carter will be seen in a revival of "Du Barry," in which she also won a brilliant success.

To-morrow evening at the Grand Opera House Elfie Fay will make her stellar début before a New York audience in a new musical comedy of metropolitan life by Harry Williams and Aaron Hoffman, entitled "The Belle of Avenue A."

The story of the offering, briefly told, concerns a gilded youth of Manhattan, who learns accidentally that the sum to be left him by his rich uncle's will depends entirely upon the promptness with which he marries. Thus warned, the youth makes every possible effort to find a wife before the return of his relative, who has been abroad. Failing in the quest, the young man is on his way to the dock to meet the old gentleman when his attention is attracted by loud cries in Avenue A, where the belle of the district is being dispossessed. He assists the young woman financially, persuades her to act as his wife for twenty-four hours, offering her a handsome bonus.

On being introduced to the uncle, the elderly person insists upon his nephew taking the bride to his home on upper Fifth Avenue. Once there, the utter inexperience of the girl in polite society causes many amusing complications.

"The Virginian" will be the offering at the Academy of Music beginning to-morrow, when a limited engagement of this successful dramatization of Owen Wister's novel will be played. Dustin Farnum will again be seen in the title rôle, and the supporting company will include Frank Campeau, Bennet Musson, Frank Vail, Harry Holliday, Mary B. Conwell, Eleanor Wilton, Amanda Wellington, Virginia Reeves, and Ethel Powers.

Florence Davis, a young actress who essayed her first starring through the South last season in a romantic comedy by Louise Malloy, entitled "The Player Maid," will present the play at a special matinée at the Hudson Theatre Friday afternoon. Miss Davis has had experience on the stage, having been associated with various Frohman companies for a number of seasons. The young actress, having been unable to secure a New York theatre, has decided upon the method of a special performance to invite metropolitan criticism.

"The Player Maid" is in four acts, and deals with the fortunes of one Eleanor Hallum, an actress of the time of David Garrick. Miss Davis will, of course, appear as the Maid, while Elliott Dexter will play the Earl of Roxbury.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

Maxine Elliott enters upon the sixth week of her prosperous engagement at the Criterion in Clyde Fitch's comedy, "Her Great Match." The end of Miss Elliott's engagement is still in the far distance.

"Man and Superman," with Robert Loraine as the star, continues to be the most talked-of play in town. It has been arranged that the comedy will remain indefinitely at the Hudson.

This week sees the final New York performance of "Leah Kleschna," so the management announces, and Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan company will make way for Mme. Kalisch in "Monna Vanna."

John Drew is well holding his own with other productions on Broadway, and begins his sixth week in Augustus Thomas's comedy, "Delancey," at the Empire to-morrow night.

In "Just Out of College" Joseph Whelock, Jr., has been cleverly fitted by George Ade, and enacts the rôle of the college graduate in a satisfactory manner. The third week at the Lyceum begins to-morrow night.

There is but one week more of "The Prodigal Son" at the New Amsterdam, when it moves to the New Montauk Theatre, Brooklyn, for the week of the 16th.

"The Prince Chap," with Cyril Scott, is playing to large houses at its new home in the Joe Weber Theatre. It will in all likelihood remain at this theatre for many weeks to come.

Henry Dixey's return to the legitimate stage in "The Man on the Box," at the Madison Square Theatre, has met with gratifying success, and the play should not lack for generous patronage.

David Warfield continues to play to packed houses at the Bijou in "The Music Master," and the comedy will doubtless remain at this playhouse for the entire season.

Chauncey Olcott begins his second week at the Majestic in "Edmund Burke." There are many pretty stage settings and Mr. Olcott's songs go with all the old-time spirit.

Margaret Anglin's fine art has ample opportunity to show itself in "Zira." She has established herself in the hearts of theatregoers, and "Zira" has evidently settled down for a long run at the Princess.

James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering are winning favor in their co-star engagement at the Savoy. "The Walls of Jericho" has repeated its London success.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

De Wolf Hopper in "Happyland" at the Lyric has scored a distinct hit. The comic opera is exquisitely staged and costumed, and much of the music is delightful.

A short theatrical "jump" is scheduled for next Saturday night, when Lulu Glaser and "Miss Dolly Dollars" leave the Knickerbocker Theatre and move over to the New Amsterdam.

Klaw & Erlanger's big spectacle, "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," enters on its eighth week at the Broadway to-morrow evening. Harry Gilfoil is now playing the Ancient Mariner.

Edna May is now one of the strongest favorites in musical comedy that New York is pleased to favor. She is playing to crowded houses in "The Catch of the Season" at Daly's.

McIntyre and Heath continue to play in "The Ham Tree" at the New York. They seem to have found a satisfactory vehicle, and it certainly is a great entertainment for a dollar.

The last six nights of Sam Bernard and "The Rollicking Girl" are announced at the Herald Square. They will have their good-bye next Saturday night, when a special bill will commemorate the event.

Lew Fields and his company continue to appeal to New York playgoers in the new burlesque of "The Music Master" and the condensed version of "It Happened in Nordland."

ISABELLE EVESSON.
At Proctor's 5th Avenue.

The Rogers Brothers in "The Rogers Brothers in Ireland" remain at the Liberty, where they are having the most successful run recorded in New York.

WITH THE STOCK COMPANIES.

What is said to be one of the most elaborate revivals of the many planned by F. F. Proctor to be presented by his all-star Fifth Avenue Theatre company is that which is to hold the boards in the playhouse next week. Viola Allen's play, "In the Palace of the King," a dramatization of the late Lorimer Stoddard's of F. Marion Crawford's novel, is the piece. It is to be staged under the direction of Lawrence Marston, the Fifth Avenue stage director, who originally staged the piece for Miss Allen.

The event has an added interest in the presentation by Mr. Proctor of rival leading women, appearing at different performances in the same rôle. Owing to the many requests from his patrons, Mr. Proctor will resume the daily matinées, and Amelia Bingham will be seen in the rôle of Dolores at all the night performances and on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday afternoons. Isabelle Evesson has joined the all-star organization, and will take Miss Bingham's place at the Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday matinées.

"La Tosca" has been selected for the offering of the Yorkville Stock Company this week at the Yorkville Theatre. The leading parts will be played by Eugene Moore and Mabel Montgomery, who are said to be fitted for the rôles. The full support of the stock company will be given these players.

"The Sporting Duchess" will be presented this week at Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, with the same elaborate settings that marked its run at the Fifth Avenue two weeks ago. The principal players will be William J. Kelley, Beatrice Morgan, Jessie Bonstelle, Paul McAllister, and James Durkin.

VAUDEVILLE.

Among the bright lights of vaudeville who will illumine the performance at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall the coming week are Olive May and John W. Albaugh, Jr., as the headliners. They will appear in Grant Stewart's comedy, "The Inspector from Kansas." Edward Clark and his six winning widows will have second place on the bill. Coleman's Dog and Cat Circus will be another one of the large acts. Among the other entertainers are Alf Grant, assisted by Charles H. Burke and Grace La Rue in the skit, "The Silver Moon;" the Kloess Sisters, Roman Ring Gymnasts; Macart's Monkeys and Dogs; George Wilson, minstrel monologist; Clarice Vance, the Southern Singer, and Toto, a European novelty.

Keith's topliners this week are Hal Davis and Inez Macauley in their condensed comedy-drama, "Pals." Merian's Dogs, conceded to be one of the cleverest canine acts in vaudeville; Harry Le Clair, James Thornton, Charles and Florence Gregson, Vera King, the Magineys, gymnasts; McGloin and Smith, Campbell and Johnson, Ben Johnson, Bruce and Daigneau, Kelly and Kent, Bean and Hamilton, and the Kinetograph complete the excellent programme.

The horrors of war and suffering of innocent women and children are vividly shown on the Cinematograph at the Eden Musée. A most pathetic scene is one showing the departure from Port Arthur of Gen. Stoessel and his officers and the women and children just as the victorious Japanese troops are entering the town.

Two ballets will be given at the Circle this week. One is called "The Four Seasons" and the other "The Golden Crook." In both the management promise a bevy of pretty girls.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

Something doing all the time is what B. E. Forrester promises the patrons of the American this week, when Yorke and Adams make their first appearance there in "Bankers and Brokers."

The Fourteenth Street Theatre will offer Nat M. Wills in "The Duke of Duluth" during the present week. The production was lately at the Majestic Theatre.

"The Ninety and Nine" is announced as the attraction at the West End for this week, beginning to-morrow afternoon with a special matinée.

At the Metropolis this week "The Shadow Behind the Throne" is offered. The press agent lays particular stress on the scenic equipment, which is said to be out of the ordinary.

Hal Reid's musical drama, "The Sweet Singer," with Jessie Mae Hall as the star, is billed for the Murray Hill this week. This drama is in four acts—all promised to be intense with "heart interest."

"Fast Life in New York" is announced for presentation at the Third Avenue, beginning to-morrow night. A. H. Woods is the producer of the melodrama.

All the paraphernalia of a full-fledged circus is said to be carried in the production of "A Runaway Boy," which comes to the Thalia this week.

The New Star management presents a "melodrama with a moral," entitled "Dangers of Working Girls." The villain is especially villainous in this piece.

Robert Edeson returns to the city this week at the Harlem Opera House, where he will present to-morrow evening "Strongheart," which had two runs in New York at the Hudson and Savoy Theatres.

THE HIPPODROME.

This week will probably witness the last performances of "The Raiders" at the Hippodrome. The war drama and military spectacle which has stirred patrons daily since the Hippodrome opened will be succeeded by "The Romance of a Hindoo Princess," which Thompson & Dundy promise will yield no less unique surprise. The climax of the plunging horses in "The Raiders" will pale before a series of land and water scenes in which equine action will be shared by twenty-four elephants. The piece will have two scenes and its costume and scenic effects, its projectors give assurance, will be a revelation. "A Yankee Circus on Mars," whose charms seem perennial, will remain.

IS LINA ABARBANELL A NEW GEISTINGER

"ABARBANELL?" said Heinrich Conried, when he was q tioned about the newest of his s s. "She is the greatest, the m gifted artist In her own fields (f she has more than one) since the admire Geistinger." On Thursday last, those ho were less directly interested than t Herr Direktor of the Metropolitan O a House and the Irving Place Theat heard Lina Abarbanell for the first e and judged her for themselves. She a eared in what is known to the "profess a" as a soubrette part. The charact which she interpreted was that of a oung servant maid, whirled all of a s den from the rusticities of a village i the sophistications of Vienna. She as not an ingénue, but a mock-ingén standing as it were between the hero of "La Mascotte" and the Cyprien of "Divons." A quarter of a ce ary ago, when she reigned supreme in eretta, the inimitable Judic would l e reveled in such a part. It was ma for a singing comedienne, with wit and umor bubbling beneath her seeming simp lity. Not, perhaps, a part calculated te eveal the higher and more dignified s es of art, but one to which only a tru artist could do justiee.

Who is this Abarban ? As she informed a TIMES man, wh he called upon her at her hotel the oth day, she is a Berliner.

"I am afraid we Berlin s are not properly appreciated," sighed the singer. "I am often told that I se less Prussian than Parisian."

She cast her eyes do with the demureness of a Sainte-n -touche, veiling for a moment the mischi that lurked in her large hazel eyes. B the corners of her expressive lips (whic although well-shaped, are somewhat o ulent) hinted at all sorts of diableries. You knew, as you looked at her dark, flushing cheek, and marked the poise of her small, well-shaped but mature figure, that, for all her apparent naïveté, she was not a prude. Her restfulness, her demureness might be discarded as easily as they were assumed. Oh, no! The little woman with the masses of black hair brushed smoothly over the face that was so distinctly Oriental, and yet in a way so Gallic, could never be a Sainte-n'y-touchs.

Presently she looked up, confirming this impression. She was not beautiful, according to accepted canons. Nor could she, perhaps, even be called pretty. But, as Victor Hugo said in describing another woman, she "was worse,"—"elle était pire"—more winning, more attractive, and more interesting. The quality most evident in her face and her big hazel eyes, in her eloquent mouth, and in her poise was unquestionably intelligence. As you watched her you were not astonished by what had been published about her versatility and her artistic "magnetism." You ceased to doubt that she had been accepted as a clever actress, alike in comedy and in drama, no less readily than as a singer of light songs, an interpreter of grand opera, and an operetta soubrette.

"All my life," said Lina Abarbanell, "I have lived in a theatrical atmosphere. At the age of two my father (who was a conductor and consequently had access to all the theatres) took me to a performance of a French comedy. When I reached girlhood I studied music, hoping at the time that some day I might win fame as a pianist or a violinist. Fate, however, plays tricks with us. And about five years ago, after I had had some training as a singer, I obtained an engagement at a theatre in Posen.

"What did I do there? Oh, a little of everything. One night I would sing Zerlina in 'Don Giovanni,' the next I would be called upon to interpret light opera. The next I might have to act—yes, act—an ingénue part in a drama of Ibsen, or in comedy. Acting soon became a passion with me. My love for it sprang up in me quite suddenly one night, after I had seen Sorma play Nora in 'A Doll's House.' Some day, maybe, I shall forsake singing altogether for drama and comedy proper. I am torn between acting and music. But I have not yet fixed definitely upon the field to which I shall devote myself permanently. The public may decide that matter for me. If it prefers me in drama, I may keep to drama."

One of the most valuable of her stage assets is her eloquent, her really wonderful, facial mobility. Her expression changes from frivolity to seriousness, from pathos to gayety, almost as by a miracle. With hardly an effort her face suggests in turn the simplicity of the little peasant Princess in "Königskinder," the ingenious malice of a Pierrot, the rustic vivacity of the Hannl in "Fruehlingsluft," the alternate gayety and terror of Ibsen's Nora. At times there also hints in that changing mask of hers at something deeper, more dramatic, bordering on tragedy. Another of her gifts (and this one, of course, is due to art) is her clear diction. Like Yvette Guilbert, of whom she so frequently reminds one, despite the physical differences between the two singers, she is a rare diseuse.

"My favorite stage characters? Well, I like all my parts. If I have a special fondness for any of them it is, perhaps, for Hedwig, in 'The Wild Duck,' Frou-Frou, the heroine of 'Mlle. Sainte-n'y-touche' and Gretel (in 'Haensel und Gretel.') I have not yet attempted the rôle of Rautendelein in 'The Sunken Bell,' but it is not impossible that I shall appear in that delightful character this season. Mr. Conried has suggested my doing so. I have sung Haensel as well as Gretel, by the bye, in Europe, and I may be cast for either part when Humperdinck's opera is produced at the Metropolitan.

"No," she continued, when THE TIMES man had recovered from the amazement awakened by the consideration of the little singer's distinctly startling repertory. "I have never had a chance of showing what I could do in a Pierrot pantomime play. But when I was in Paris some seasons ago I studied Yvette Guilbert, and afterward sang many of her songs, her 'chansons rosses' in French at the Berliner Ueberbrett'l, a theatrical institution of the same kind as the defunct Theatre-Libre. Since then I have sung similar songs, written for me, in German."

Lina Abarbanell is particularly well worth watching at rehearsals. It would be an object lesson to many of our disdainful American comedy queens to see with what unwearying devotion she throws herself into her work. She is not an actress who tells the stage manager that "it will be all right when the public performance comes." She works just as hard when her audience is limited to Mr. Conried and a few of his assistants, as when the house is full. And it is plain, from the scrupulous care with which she shows every bit of "business," and renders even the most fleeting musical suggestion in her part, that she is heart and soul, body and spirit, a believer in the old maxim, "Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well."

From the hotel in which he had been chatting with her, the TIMES man followed the "new Geistinger" to the Irving Place Theatre. There, for three hours or more, he saw her patiently go over scene after scene with the Conried company, never complaining when the blunders of some comrade compelled the stage manager to repeat a song, a dance, or a dramatic episode. This devotion to her work, even when it is exhausting, even when to a less faithful artist it might seem drudgery, probably half explains her success.

But conscience and industry of themselves would not have made her what she has already become after only a few years' career. Most that is admirable in her she owes to nature. She is a born artist.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Evidence accumulates that the era of cheap money which for two years or more has prevailed at all the important financial centres of the world has come to a close. Whether the interregnum is to be brief or protracted is a point upon which financial opinion is by no means unanimous, but that, so far as our own markets are concerned, the nature of the factors which have terminated the period of low rates indicates continued control of the money market until the end of the present year is so clearly the best judgment of the matter that conservatism persuades its acceptance. The most sagacious bankers of the financial district are looking ahead to a demand for money which, applied to the supply, present and prospective, will result in rates ranging from 5 to 7 per cent., with increases in this maximum quotation whenever the normal requirements are supplemented by occasional and urgent inquiries.

A review of the premises upon which is based this conclusion, indicating unusual activity in money, enforces both their present cogency and the probability of their continued domination of the situation. Chief among the controlling factors is the concurrence of a remarkable business expansion and an unprecedented crop outturn. In the past the presence of either of these factors has led to such insistent demands for funds that money at this centre has commanded more than the ordinary rate, and when the demand from either factor came at a time of extended speculation in stocks, as in 1902, the result has been a rise in rates which has finally checked speculation. This year the needs of the manufacturer and the merchant, who see profitable employment for every dollar which they can command, and of the farmer whose lands have yielded him richest returns, have at the same moment claimed consideration, and the simple and altogether natural result has been requisitions upon banking institutions for such extraordinary amounts of money that their reserves have dwindled to the point where illegitimate demands upon them, if acceded to, would become both an injustice and a menace to business at large. For there is no least sign of diminution in the widespread trade activity, and to the assurance of splendid yields of wheat and corn there has now been added the promise of an excellent crop of cotton, the marketing of which is yet to come, from the financial point of view. Proof of the intense and lucrative use of money in trade is found in the record of the country's bank clearings. Business expansion practically began with the month of September, 1904, and in the subsequent twelve months total bank clearings aggregated $130,690,000,000, a sum 37 per cent. in excess of the clearings of the previous year and 21 per cent. greater than the clearings of any other like period in banking annals. To understand the scope of this activity it is only necessary to know that in the nine months of the present calendar year clearings in New England have increased 16.9 per cent., in the Middle Western States 50 per cent., in the Southern States 9.6 per cent., in the Western States 6.4 per cent., and in the Far West over 28 per cent. To foster and encourage this great expansion in trade there has been reared a vast credit structure, and foremost in the work have been the banks and trust companies of this city. Its steady development has finally led to the retention here of the slenderest reserves of cash against outstanding obligations, and in the preservation of these there has been necessary the tortuous device of shifting loans from banks to trust companies, but in this process there has been no actual increase of the ultimate reserve. The real pressure of the burden has not been lessened a feather's weight, unless reckoning is made of the small supplies of gold which have been obtained at usurer's rates and which have gone in turn into the insatiable maw of trade. Contributing factors to this depletion of reserves have been the earlier readiness of banking institutions to make time loans at low rates and the unquestionably high prices of the stocks forming the collateral for these loans as well as for the day to day loans. The volume of outstanding time loans is heavier than is generally understood, and they have been largely responsible for the calmness with which the market has feced the high call money rates. But their existence has contracted the supply of funds, and by that much added to the interest procurable on call loans. So far as the high prices of stocks are concerned it is evident, for instance, that the pool which is understood to be operating in the common stocks of the American Locomotive Company now that the stock is selling at 59 requires twice the amount of money needed to carry the same quantity of stock a year ago, when the price of this issue was 26. This holds true with regard to many of the active securities which poole and cliques and individuals are carrying by means of loans and the aggregate of these requirements has imposed a real strain on the [illegible] supply. All this is yet to be [illegible] the demands which are [illegible] First among these is [illegible] the Japanese bond [illegible] falls due on Monday [illegible] This calls for some $30[illegible] naturally lead to some [illegible] of the money market at the end of the present week, if not earlier. Provision has been made for the retention of this money until well into November, but it is evident that Japan would prefer to have it in hand rather than experience the necessity of issuing further Treasury bills at home, as she was compelled to do last week. Other demands include the $12,000,000 issue of Erie convertible bonds, and issues of securities by the New Haven and the Canadian Pacific, although the requirements of the latter road will be met largely by stockholders resident in Canada and England. The requirements of the West have not been fully met as yet. Subsequent to this date in other years the losses to the interior have been very heavy, one of the chief sources of the drain being in the demands for moving the cotton crop. To New Orleans we have thus far sent only some $3,500,000, while in 1903 we sent to that city $21,365,000 through the Sub-Treasury, and in 1902, $13,211,000. Last year the drain was lighter, amounting to some $9,000,000. In seeking to arrive at an estimate of the duration of these interior demands it is found that the industrial and commercial activity again project themselves into the calculation. The accumulations of wealth at interior cities has given rise to local enterprises of all kinds. Small factories, interurban and urban trolley systems, telephone companies, and banking institutions have been put under way, and the money accruing from the marketing of the products of the farms and the profits of trade are going more and more into these local undertakings. This leads to the retention of the funds supplied by our banks and results in a slow return movement. The part that gold imports are to play in alleviating or terminating the period of money scarcity is not wholly clear. Gold can be obtained as it has been already at excessive prices, but if it continues to come in by means of credits the return of currency from the interior and the exports of staples will no more than offset the indebtedness created, although in the meantime, of course, the credit fabric will have been maintained. The rise in discount rates abroad will almost of necessity compel corresponding rates here if imports are to be made or exports avoided. The probability of the issue of a Russian loan of some $300,000,000 before the end of the present month is also a factor in this situation, calling as it does for the ingathering of funds in preparation for its flotation.

It seems reasonably clear that if these conditions lead to continued activity in money, extended speculation in stocks is improbable. Such speculation could only invite the disaster which naturally follows this misuse of funds, and it is not apt to gain the sanction of those in control of credits. The lessons of other years are not so far forgotten. Without the intervention of such a speculative movement and with a jealous husbanding of present resources the situation presents no disturbing phases. So far as the stock market is concerned the effects of higher money are more likely to be found in the curtailment of business, as in the week just ended, or as in the past month, than in more than normal price losses, although this depends also on the intervention of unforeseen factors. At present, at least, the evidences of business well-being and of agricultural prosperity are unmistakable, and this engenders widespread confidence in the future.

FUTURE CURRENCY DEMANDS.

South Likely to Need Large Amount for Movement of Cotton—Total Loss to Interior Since Mid-August.

The normal movement of currency to the interior at this season was so interfered with the week before last by the counter shipments to New York, which doubtless had reference to the final payments to be made on several large bond issues, that during that week the movement to New York practically nullified that to the interior. It cannot, however, be inferred from this that the demand for currency for crop moving purposes has already come to an end this year much ahead of time. Nor must it be forgotten that in normal course there are still ahead very large demands for currency to be used in the marketing of the cotton crop.

Last week's report on the condition of that crop at the close of September affords fresh grounds for the assumption that this year's yield of the staple will not be below the average, despite early predictions that it would be a very short crop. The need of money to move the crop may therefore fully equal the usual demand for this purpose. Indeed, were the crop below the normal it is probable that price would make up for the deficiency, with the result that the need of money would in either event be up to the average.

The familiar theory "that the West will not need New York's help to any extent this year" is already being applied to the South. The indications are, however, that Southern bankers are counting upon New York to finance the cotton crop fully as much as in past years. Notices received from their correspondents in the South by some of the New York banks indicate that transfers to the South will in all probability be as large as in the past. It is interesting in this connection to record the transfers through the Sub-Treasury to New Orleans during recent years. The record for a number of years past by months is given in the following table:

The movement this season was earlier than usual, but fell off abruptly in September, so that the total for the first three months of the fiscal year was smaller this year than in any of the past four years. This past week the transfers to New Orleans have been resumed, amounting for the week to $500,000, or as much as was sent during the whole month of September.

Taking the currency movement as a whole, it is found that we have already sent to the interior since the middle of August considerably more than was sent during the same period last year. The explanation of this may be not that the movement was earlier this year, and therefore ending sooner, but that the larger crops of this season and the prices secured for the various cereals has called this year for much more money wherewith to bring the product of the fields to market.

There is always more or less discrepancy between the estimates of the currency movement and the movement of cash revealed in the bank statements. One reason for this lies in the fact that the estimates do not include the local movement of money, such as the shifting of cash from the trust companies to the banks, which undoubtedly accounted for the extraordinary bank statement made public a week ago yesterday. Between the middle of August and the beginning of October the banks reported the loss of $34,000,000, the same in round numbers as the loss during the corresponding period in 1904. The loss shown by the currency movement estimates this year was $52,000,000, and last year $30,000,000. The previous year the two statements up to this date were altogether at variance, as they were also in 1901. In 1902, however, the two were very closely approximated at about $29,000,000.

Last year the total loss in cash to the banks between mid-August and the first week in December amounted to $69,000,000. If the parallel between this year and last in the matter of the loss so far reported by the banks is to be maintained the local banks will have to face a further loss of $25,000,000 between now and Dec. 1, when the demand for currency to move the crops, with the exception of cotton, may be expected to have come to an end.

HANDLING WALL STREET'S MILLIONS IN CALL LOANS

Rapidity Essential to Transaction of Financial Operations.

GREAT SUMS LOANED DAILY

Methods Adopted in Caring for Brokers' Loans—Bulk of Stock Exchange Business Done on Borrowed Money.

The advance a week ago in the call loan rate to 7 per cent. brought into the market offers of many millions, single institutions making loans that amounted in one day to $10,000,000 or more. Again, on Wednesday last, one of the largest of the National banks recalled from the market loans amounting in the aggregate, it was said, to $20,000,000. These incidents suggest very forcibly the extent of Wall Street's transactions in call loans.

Not a day passes on which millions are not put out on call, and when by reason of a disturbance in rates or for other causes loans are being recalled by the banks, necessitating the borrowing of funds from other banks, the business assumes enormous proportions. It is all done with the ease resulting from every day routine, but to the outside observer the loaning of vast fortunes, to be paid back at a moment's notice, so to speak, and the safeguarding of the millions that are loaned in this way, seem tasks almost impossible of accomplishment.

That the business is not done without risk, despite the free and easy manner in which Wall Street handles its millions, is clearly shown by the theft ten days ago of collateral given for a call loan amounting to $300,000. This incident aroused Wall Street itself to the realization that more ought to be done to make safe the vast sums that are loaned from day to day—if indeed more can be done. The difficulty lies in the fact that to surround the placing and repayment of call loans with too many precautions would be to defeat the utility of loans of this kind. It is of the essence of a call loan that it can be had on the instant, so to speak, and can be recalled in similar fashion.

If, for example, every check presented in payment for a call loan were scrutinized minutely and inquiry made of the firm having the loan whether they desired the collateral delivered to the messenger having the check more time would be consumed in attending to one loan than can in ordinary course be given to a dozen loans. The National City Bank, which was the victim of the recent theft of collateral, has on the average to negotiate two loans a minute. The average amount of money loaned weekly by this institution is in excess of $50,000,000. In general, for every loan made another is paid off, and in addition there is the mass of work entailed by the substitution of collateral. All of these operations must be conducted with dispatch. Only by doing its work quickly can Wall Street manage its financial operations at all. The loss of even a few minutes would prove, on occasions, the source of much embarrassment to both the banks and to their customers.

Nor would a bank's customers regard with complacency a too rigid supervision of documents passing between themselves and the bank even if it were for the purpose of safeguarding both. Under the present condition of very keen rivalry between banks some institution is sure to be found that will do pretty much as the customer wants. Thus all are forced to facilitate all transactions to the utmost. Even reasonable delays are sometimes the cause of losing a customer, and the adoption of too many safeguards would result in the loss of many depositors.

The great bulk of the operations on the Stock Exchange, where on a moderately active day securities are handled having a value of say $60,000,000, are carried on with the aid of borrowed money, perhaps half of the amount involved being borrowed on call. The placing of time loans is a relatively simple matter for the reason that there is seldom any hurry either in the making or in the repayment of the loan. It is in loans that run for only a day, or for a few days perhaps, that rapidity of handling becomes essential.

In itself the operation of securing a call loan is a simple one. Many such loans are negotiated directly between the bank and its customer. The ordinary course, however, for both borrower and lender is to send an order to the Stock Exchange to the money brokers on the floor. There the loan is made so far as the amount and the rate of interest are concerned. The borrower upon receiving the name of the bank that is to make the loan delivers to the bank the collateral that is to be given for the loan. Of course, it must meet the approval of the bank officials. The certificates of stock are usually placed in a large heavy paper envelope indorsed with the name of the borrower and of the bank making the loan, the amount, the interest rate, and to this is added a list of the securities. If bonds, which are more bulky than stock certificates, are part of the collateral it is common to tie them along with the envelope containing the stock all in one bundle. The bank gives its check to the borrower for the amount of the loan or credits him with it on the books of the bank, and he is then free to check against it or if he is not a depositor of the bank making the loan, he deposits the bank's check in his own bank and draws against it there. In the case of paying off a loan the reverse of the operation is gone through in the manner made familiar in the accounts of the recent theft at the City Bank.

Call loans, as the name indicates, are payable on call. The bank may recall its money without notice, and the borrower is free to repay the loan whenever he chooses. For this reason such loans are often spoken of as one-day loans. As a matter of fact they usually run for more than a day, and not infrequently they are allowed to stand for a considerable time. If the money market weakens or advances while the loan is standing the rate of interest is adjusted from day to day. If the bank desires to advance the interest rate the borrower is notified by telephone, and if he assents to the advance in the rate the loan stands, otherwise he pays it off from his own funds or with money borrowed elsewhere if another bank is willing to name a lower interest rate. Similarly call loans are marked down by the borrower unless, as usually is the case, the bank itself makes a lower rate of interest on its loans when the condition of the money market calls for such change.

In general it is true of course that the higher the rate secured on loans the better it is for the banks. It not infrequently happens, however, that the banks purposely force down the interest rate. This is done either in the interest of some speculative movement or to facilitate important financial operations that would be seriously interfered with by an abnormal rate for money. In times of panic or market disturbance the banks and private banking houses frequently attempt to restore confidence by offering great sums on call on the floor of the Stock Exchange. The bankers' pool that undertook in December, 1902, to loan $50,000,000 is a case in point. A week ago a prominent bank offered any part of $10,000,000 in lots of $25,000, a form of offer that much resembles the bids for any part of 50,000 shares of stock that certain operators on the floor of the Exchange resort to when they are through bulling a stock for themselves and begin to bull it for others.

In the case of call loans which stand for a considerable period, it is a common practice for the broker who holds the loan to substitute for the collateral originally given other securities equally acceptable to the bank. Thus securities which the broker may require for the purpose of delivering them to his customer or in some similar way are withdrawn from the loan and other securities put in their place. Substitutions of this kind frequently are made in the same loan many times before it is paid off. The extent to which collateral is changed in this way is indicated by the fact that in some of the largest banks substitutions are made at the rate of about 200 a day.

None of the active brokerage houses have capital of their own sufficient to carry on their transactions without the aid of borrowed money. Even with the system of call loans as fully developed as it is in Wall Street, it is only by stretching the law that the banks are able to fill all the requirements of stock market business. Brokers in making payment for stock delivered to them give their checks on their bank to an aggregate amount much in excess of the balances to their credit. These checks are certified by the banks, and the amount made up later in the day by means of a call loan secured by the deposit of the securities taken in by the broker during the day. Such an arrangement makes it essential that the operation be conducted without a hitch and that the loan be arranged by the close of business on the day the checks are drawn. The same procedure is followed day after day.

Another reason for facilitating to the utmost the loaning of money on call is the fact that the banks are forced to keep their funds in use to avoid losing money on them. Money left on their hands at the close of the day in excess of the required reserve means just so much loss in the bank's earnings. The necessity of keeping all their funds active is increased by the fact that because of interest allowed on deposits the cost of money to the banks is a large item on the debit side of their accounts.

A FORMER WABASH CONTEST.

George J. Gould's Quarrel with President Ashley and How It Resulted.

The present contest over the control of the Wabash Railroad is the second contest that George J. Gould has engaged in with a President of that road. Years ago, soon after he became a member of the Board of Directors of the Wabash, Mr. Gould had a controversy with President O. D. Ashley, and the occasion came near being the end of Mr. Ashley's career as President of the road. Mr. Ashley, so the story runs, had done something to offend George Gould, who was newly come upon the board, and felt even then that all must accede to his wishes. Mr. Ashley had ideas of his own, and is said not to have considered it incumbent upon him to give way to the young man, who was only one of the Directors, even though he were the son of Jay Gould.

Whatever the exact cause of the quarrel between the two, the upshot of it was that Mr. Ashley realized that his position was jeopardized. To make sure of his election when the annual meeting would be held—the time for it was approaching—he sent out for proxies in his name. The great majority of the security holders, unaware of any dissension in the company, returned the proxies made out in Mr. Ashley's name. In all he secured about $45,000,000 of the securities, a good majority. Then he waited complacently for the election. This was about six weeks before the annual meeting.

As soon as George Gould knew what had taken place he started out himself in search of proxies. Most of those he interviewed had already given theirs to Mr. Ashley. It took only a little argument on the part of Mr. Gould to persuade the majority to revoke these proxies and give them to him. He did his work very quietly, keeping in his possession both the revocation of the first proxies and those in his own name.

The day of the annual meeting came around. Mr. Ashley entered the meeting in the firm belief that he would control it absolutely. Then Mr. Gould showed his hand. When the counting of the proxies was over Mr. Ashley had unrevoked proxies for only $20,000,000 of securities while George Gould had about $50,000,000. At this point young Gould relented. Mr. Ashley was even then an old man, and he was allowed to stay as President. They got along better after that. Revocation of proxies may play an important part in next Tuesday's meeting.

CONDEMNED EQUIPMENT.

Freight Cars Sold for Scrap Represent a Large Amount Annually—New Uses for Old Engines.

The sale by the Erie Railroad of 200 condemned freight cars to a firm in Buffalo for the sum of $1 each affords a striking example of the loss resulting from the necessity of replacing antiquated equipment. In this instance only the wood of the cars was disposed of at the price given, so that there will be salvage in addition to the $200 paid for the 200 cars, but the loss nevertheless is very considerable. In the recent report of the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company $163,158 is given as the amount lost on 361 cars which were sold as too old to be operated.

In 1904 the Erie Railroad replaced 5,000 cars which were no longer in fit condition, selling them to other roads at an average price of $100 a car, or perhaps for an eighth of their original cost.

When the Manhattan Elevated changed its motive power from steam to electricity it had left on its hands a great number of the small locomotives, the smoke and cinders from which had for so long discomforted New Yorkers. Many of these antiquated specimens of locomotives are still stored by the company awaiting a purchaser. Some of those already disposed of found their way to China, where they have been in use on the Canton-Hankow Railway, the control of which has just passed from the American promoters to the Chinese Government.

RIGGING A MONEY MARKET

METHODS NOW IMPOSSIBLE

Hypothecating a Certified Check Many Times Over—Hiding Money Reserves.

A critical Wall Street element, habitually distrustful of things as they are, has been saying of late that the weekly bank statement is often "influenced" or "made," laying insinuating emphasis upon those words, and perhaps a great many people have harbored a similar suspicion, without expressing it openly, for the Saturday averages recently have certainly on several occasions inadequately reflected money market conditions. It is also asserted that the call money market of late has been manipulated in order to affect stock prices. The Wall Street mind is abnormally suspicious. Many things fall under suspicion unjustly or by accident. The suspicion that artificial influences are sometimes brought to bear upon the money market to aid speculative ventures in the stock market is, perhaps, of all chronic suspicions, the one most easily aroused. That is true because, in the first place, everybody knows that money market situations have been artificially created in the past by operators having extensive commitments in the stock market, and, in the second place, the temptation must be as strong to-day as it ever was to those who are powerful both in the money market and in the stock market.

Of recent years, however, there has been no such flagrant manipulation of the money market as was frequently practiced under the régime of twenty or thirty years ago. Operators surviving from a former period compare present and past conditions favorably to those of this period. They may not take a high and moral view of it. They may say merely that the money market has become too big to be controlled by a few men as it used to be, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that practices which were common enough in Wall Street a quarter of a century ago would not be tolerated at the present time.

One way of tightening up the money market in the old days was so simple and effective that it became at length a scandal and the banks had to combine against it. An operator with a large bank deposit who desired to make money inaccessible would take from his bank a certified check and present it to another bank as security for a loan. From this second bank he would take another certified check and use it at a third bank as security for another loan, and so on indefinitely, as far as the banks would let him go.

Another way of accomplishing the same thing required the co-operation of several large depositors, who would all procure certified checks and lock them up in their vaults for several days. The money represented by such checks could not be loaned out by the banks, and was therefore removed from the market.

The direct way of making a squeeze in the money market, of course, was simply to withdraw large amounts of gold notes and bullion and lock them away in vaults. In the old days Wall Street had many legends concerning mysterious vaults where reserves of money were secreted, or from which unexpected reserves were produced accordingly as the interests of those controlling the money market demanded, and it was true that such things were done. A perfect understanding between certain banks and the manipulators made it easy. The manipulator would merely say that he needed vault room for a large amount of money which he might have use for momentarily, and the money was put there to remain until it pleased him to restore it to the custody of the bank and to market circulation.

Such things are no longer possible. Under temporary conditions even to-day, of course, concerted action on the part of several individuals or institutions controlling large amounts of money may produce flurries in call money on the floor of the Stock Exchange, and determined action on the part of a few large banks may for a while keep interest rates below their natural level or hold them above it, but in the averaging of things interest rates reflect actual money market conditions much more closely than they did on occasions twenty or thirty years ago. The money market of to-day is too big to be controlled by one clique, let alone to be influenced greatly by an individual. An operator of the old days would often put out a large amount of money on call and then call it back suddenly when bank reserves were low and break the stock market. It took less money to produce such effects then than it does to-day.

FALL MONEY RATES.

High Figure for Year Seldom Reached In First Week of October—Record for Ten Years.

Little cause for surprise need be found in the erratic fluctuations of the call money rate this past week in view of past experiences in the New York call money market. Interest nevertheless attached to the loaning of money at 8 per cent. one day and at 2¾ per cent. the next. Friday's ease in money, or rather the ease during the last hour of business when most of the day's requirements had been filled, has been seen many times before under similar circumstances. It has seldom occurred that the highest rate of the year has been recorded in the first week in October. In fact, during the past ten years only once, in 1902, did call money go to 35 per cent. at the beginning of October.

The fluctuations during the week, during the crop-moving season, and during the entire year for the past decade, are shown in the table below. The figures in the second and third columns for this year cover, of course, only nine months:

MORGAN AND KUHN-LOEB

Testimony of Messrs. Schiff and Perkins Reveals Immensity of the Banking Business In Issuing Securities—No Parallel in Other Callings.

It is seldom that facts have come to light which bring out greater distinctness and magnitude of the business transacted by the financial community then those which have appeared from the testimony of George W. Perkins of J. P. Morgan & Co. and Jacob H. Schiff of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in the insurance inquiry. With a frankness that is seldom obtained, except from the witness stand of a great legislative investigation, both men approximated the gross business done by their concerns in the original sale of securities for definite periods, Mr. Schiff saying that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. in the last five years had sold to the market securities aggregating $1,360,000,000, and Mr. Perkins telling the committee that the gross sales of the Morgan firm in the four and a half years which he had been connected with it amounted to the even more stupendous sum of $1,400,000,000.

These figures are so gigantic that it is a little difficult to obtain any basis of comparison, and the fact that the banker in handling millions of securities is dealing with certificates of indebtedness or ownership of great corporations instead of with their tangible assets tends to make one forget that his is just as much a productive business as the business of the man who digs from the ground or manufactures or transports. For illustration, let it be supposed that a railroad desires to build 100 miles of line or to lay out millions of dollars in eliminating curves and grades and bettering its equipments. It has not, presumably, the money in hand and must, therefore, borrow against such of its assets as are not otherwise pledged or create a new stock interest and thus invite more people to become joint owners of its property.

But how is this to be done? The railroad itself has neither the facilities nor the talent—if the recent experience of the Pennsylvania system in trying to market a large part of its own securities may be taken as a criterion—to handle the new issues itself. Moreover, it needs the money which it is proposed to have to spend within a certain definite time, and, failing to obtain it when needed, the road must suffer seriously in its extension or improvement projects. So the banker comes in, first as underwriter, guaranteeing with his associates and upon the good name and business reputation of his firm that the railroad shall obtain its needed money within the specified time.

Thus the banker contributes the economic utility of time just as truly as if he undertook to perform the actual physical work within the contract limitations. He is therefore a producer, and the sum of his transactions represents his contribution to the aggregate business of the country.

So it may be fair to make a comparison between the annual "turnover" of such firms as Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co. and the gross earnings of some of the country's great corporate enterprises, although it will be impossible to extend this far into the business world, as distinct from the world of finance, for the reason that the great mercantile concerns do not report their earnings in such shape as to make them available. It is obvious, however, that a gross business in the original sale of securities alone, averaging $260,000,000 a year in the case of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. or $311,000,000 a year in the case of J. P. Morgan & Co., is immensely in excess of the business of the great mercantile establishments.

The only earnings that approximate these in magnitude are those of the great railroad systems and some of the large industrial corporations, but in all this list, save only the Standard Oil Company, which does not report its earnings, the billion-and-a-half-dollar United States Steel Corporation is the only one whose gross earnings appear largely in excess of the sales of securities by the banking firms mentioned. The steel corporation earned from sales in 1902 $560,510,088, in 1903, $536,572,871, and in 1904, $444,405,431. Of the railroads, the Pennsylvania heads the list, with gross earnings in 1903 from its 3,618 miles of track east of Pittsburg amounting to $122,626,419. The Union Pacific in 1903 earned from its 5,344 miles of track $54,004,819. The New York Central, standing next to the Pennsylvania among the railroads, earned from 3,490 miles of track in 1904, $78,573,205; the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, in 1903, earned $66,467,612 gross on 8,300 miles of track, while the Baltimore and Ohio, from 3,978 miles of track, earned gross $65,200,262; the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, long known as "the market leader," earned on 6,906 miles of track in 1903, $48,688,423. The Chicago and Northwestern earned $53,696,450 gross in 1904 from 7,412 miles of track, and James J. Hill's road, the Great Northern, $41,334,649 in 1904 from 5,981 miles of track. Among industrials it may be noted that the American Smelting and Refining Company, in the year ended April 30, 1905, reported gross earnings of $10,506,683, and the International Mercantile Marine, in its last fiscal year, gross earnings of $28,846,993.

So the comparison might be continued indefinitely, and the annual business of the Morgan firm and of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. would still stand as expressed by the sales of securities alone far in advance of that of the greatest corporations in the country save only the United States Steel and, presumably, the Standard Oil. Mr. Schiff testified that the commission charged by his firm on underwritings was uniformly 1 per cent. on the gross amount of securities handled. This represents of course only a portion of the banker's profit, for to it must be added the profit on that portion of the underwriting which the banking firm retains for itself, and such profits as it subsequently realizes on its personal investment on the securities which it puts out. It must be remembered also that the flotation of securities constitutes only one branch of a great banking business, although of course it is the principal branch. If the foreign exchange business, money lending business, and pure market operations of a great banking house were added in still more surprising results would be apparent, results which when expressed in figures are almost inconceivable from the viewpoint of one who thinks that four, five, or eight partners handle the entire executive management, and that the details of the business are instructed to a force of employes which in many instances would not make up an adequate complement for a good sized dry goods store.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Decrease $3,000,000 More Than Minimum Estimate—Industrials Up.

The loss of $8,454,700 in cash reported by the associated banks in their statement yesterday, and the accompanying decrease of $3,153,850 in surplus reserves, were generally accepted as a much more trustworthy indication of the money position than has been offered by recent returns. The cash loss exceeded the minimum preliminary estimate by some $3,000,000, and was $1,500,000 greater than the maximum loss forecasted, which may mean that the statement corrected some of the obvious inaccuracies of the return of the previous week. The reported decrease of $11,889,400 in loans is hardly accounted for by the markets of the week, and is more easily attributed to the shifting of loans to non-Clearing House lenders. The decrease of $21,203,400 in deposits resulted in a lessened reserve requirement, and the surplus now stands $4,286,175. This compares with $12,636,900 in 1904, $16,577,125 in 1903, and $1,527,350 in 1902. The gold imports of the week were a material aid in preserving the surplus.

Prices on the Stock Exchange before the appearance of the bank statement were dominated by the lower range of quotations cabled from the London market, which was also the source of moderate selling orders, and by some uneasiness over the conditions to be disclosed by the statement. Opening quotations were at substantial declines in most cases, New York Central losing a point before the end of the first 10 minutes of trading, and the general list sagged steadily, although, as heretofore, diminution of business was the principal result of the prevailing perplexity. When the statement was finally published, whatever selling it induced was fairly offset by short covering, although prices again sagged to the close, when, in a majority of issues, the losses had assumed rather substantial proportions. The industrial section of the market presents a curious contrast to the falling prices elsewhere. Under the leadership of American Locomotive, which closed the day with a gain of 3 points, many of the industrial stocks made vigorous advances. American Car and Foundry, Pressed Steel Car, and United States Cast Iron Pipe participated in this movement, but it was, perhaps, noteworthy that the United States Steel shares were unaffected. The demonstration in American Locomotive was evidently accepted at its real worth by the market at large. It is not certain that this personally conducted movement, which is generally understood to be due to the initiative of interests who have been engaged in unremunerative cotton speculation, was not one of the unpleasant influences of the day.

FRENCH GOLD EXPORTS.

Paris Says the $5,000,000 Shipments Were Not for America.

PARIS, Oct. 7.—Leading American shippers of French gold say they have not made any shipments to the United States out of the $5,000,000 recently withdrawn from the Bank of France. The report of the shipment to America grew out of Thursday's statement of the Bank of France showing that the gold balance had fallen during the week from $592,414,434 to $587,981,323.

Lazard Frères incline to the view that the amount has gone to Egypt and other points outside of the main markets. The managers of the Bank of Franco say they are not aware of the destination of the shipments, as they deal with bankers who make their own shipments.

The European Economist calls attention to the movement of precious metals to the United States and gives a table showing that the French export of gold to New York since Jan. 1 totals $5,070,513.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 7.—Firm prices and moderate activity characterized the trading to-day. There was a good inquiry for investment issues, while little business was transacted in the purely speculative line.

Seaboard 4s were the feature of the dealings and were liberally traded in, advancing the price ⅛. There seemed to be a plentiful supply in the market at 90. Seaboard 10-year 5s gained ⅜ on smaller transactions, and Seaboard new common was nominally higher. Alabama Consolidated Coal and Iron 5s suffered one point decline. Prices in other parts of the stock list were inclined to ease off. Northern Central declined one point.

Shares, 120; bonds, $102,000.

For many years it was the grim pleasantry of the active head of a large commission house, on arriving at his office a little before the opening of the stock market each morning, to hang up his hat, survey the roomful of hopeful customers all discussing intently the meaning of fractional price changes for American stocks in London, and say: "Good morning, investors!"

The bank statement shows: Loans, $1,059,740,900; deposits, $1,059,261,700; total reserve, (specie and legal tender,) $269,101,600.

On the opening yesterday morning a large line of various stocks was sold by a speculative house that has been very prominent recently on both sides of the market. It was supposed to be acting in this instance for a professional operator whose activities of late have been principally on the bull side. This selling and that of miscellaneous origin which it influenced caused prices to decline somewhat sharply in the first hour of trading. With quotations ½ to 1 per cent. lower than Friday's closing prices, the market became dull again, except for unwonted activity in a few industrial specialties, and trading was at almost a standstill when the bank statement appeared. It looked at first as if prices were going to rally on the bank statement, its publication being immediately followed by upward starts of eighths and quarters in most of the leading issues, but the whole list turned weak before the closing and the last prices were in most cases the lowest of the day.

Declines ranging from ⅛ to 2 per cent. in stocks like Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Canadian Pacific, Steel common, Reading, Pennsylvania, Erie, New York Central, and St. Paul contrasted sharply with gains in such things as American Locomotive and Cast Iron Pipe.

The leader of the market yesterday, both in activity and strength, was American Locomotive common, which advanced more than 3 points to 59¾ on transactions amounting to nearly 60,000 shares. The next most active stock was Steel common, in which the trading approximated 30,000 shares. This movement in American Locomotive is accompanied by rumors of an early dividend for the common stock. On the movement which culminated in April the stock sold at 61¼. Unfortunately for the speculative reputation of American Locomotive, it has been manipulated a good deal by men whose stock market methods are generally disliked. They have bulled it unwisely on several occasions, leaving it in a very vulnerable position. There is perhaps no other stock in the market on which alleged inside information has been more misleading and unprofitable. It is not improbable that this rise is engineered at the expense, largely, of an obstinate bear account. Brokers having no particular interest in the stock have thought for some time that somebody must be uncomfortably short of it, judging so from the character of the borrowing demand. This demand has been so urgent recently as to cause the stock to lend "flat," that is, the borrowers have been willing to waive the interest in order to have the use of the stock. One suspicious circumstance connected with yesterday's movement in the stock was that nearly everybody seemed to have the tip at the opening to buy it.

The rise in American Locomotive imparted strength to other equipment stocks, notably American Car and Foundry and Pressed Steel Car.

A very prominent Stock Exchange house, being bullish, writes: "There are some minor producers of State and National income of which little or no account is generally taken. The crow of the cock and the jubilant cackling of the hen are overlooked as mere noisy adjuncts of the barnyard. And yet the State Labor Bureau of Missouri has gathered data showing that surplus product of the hens of that State for the year 1904 was greater than that from horses, mules, hogs, and sheep, reaching the surprising total of $31,642,762. Live poultry figured up $13,473,379, dressed poultry $4,856,364, eggs $13,021,066, and feathers $289,973. To convey this product to market would require 20,751 cars, which, allowing 40 feet to the car, would make a train 157 miles long." What shall the incorrigible bears answer to this? How can they fight such a country? There is no way of selling eggs short as a speculation.

A good many brokers are out of sympathy with the market because, in their judgment, it could have been handled in a way to make it much more attractive to their clients. They have been waiting for a good reaction in prices on which to put their people into the market, and those controlling the situation, instead of permitting such a reaction, have pursued the other policy of holding prices on this level in spite of money market conditions, heedless of the criticism that by doing so they were opposing a large and influential body of Wall Street sentiment. There are brokers who, so far from being favorably impressed by the strength of the market, are only the more prejudiced by it. They insist that people who are not attracted on this level would enter the market on a lower level, and that if a reaction of substantial proportions had been permitted a fortnight or three weeks ago, when money began to get tight, the market would now be broader and safer than it is, and commission houses would be doing more business. They attribute the narrowness of the market to the obstinacy with which the bull element has held prices up.

If it should become necessary, as many operators are now suggesting, to swing the market into low-priced stocks the bull campaign would have to be recast, for the market up to this time has been made very largely in the high-priced stocks. The commission house public has shown a strong disinclination to buy the costly stocks on the highest level of prices at which they have ever sold, but could possibly be induced to take hold of low-priced stocks which are selling much below their high record prices. It is much easier to believe that a stock may go back to a high price at which it has once sold than to be persuaded that another stock which has just made a new high record will go on advancing. When a man is advised to buy a stock he is likely to ask certain questions. How much is it up already? How high has it recently sold? When he hears that a stock is selling higher than it has ever sold before, he becomes conservative at once. It can be urged in favor of a good many of the low-priced stocks that they are selling well below their high-record prices. That is because the bullish speculation of the last eighteen months has run so largely to the high-priced issues.

Delaware, Lackawanna and Western made a new high record last week at 460. It requires some effort of the imagination to think of Lackawanna as ever having been an active speculative feature of the stock market, and yet it was only a few years ago one of the most highly speculative issues in the railroad list. In an English work on American railroad securities as investments, Van Oss, in 1892, wrote of Lackawanna: "Out of a total revenue exceeding $40,000,000, presumably more than $9,000,000 are derived from coal traffic, but it is impossible to give exact figures, the annual report issued by the company consisting of a laconic statement filling one side of a small sheet of paper, a fact no doubt connected with the highly speculative nature of the stock, which is always largely dealt in in Wall Street."

CRUCIBLE STEEL'S GOOD YEAR

Profits Wipe Out Nearly all the Deficit—Will Issue No Bonds.

The profits of the Crucible Steel Company of America for the year ended Aug. 31, 1905, were nearly large enough to balance the deficit of $2,155,632 reported a year ago. The remaining deficit, as given in the annual report, is $23,141. In a year the floating debt of the company has been decreased from $6,203,767 to $3,650,190.

The improvement in condition, says President Smith, renders it unnecessary to issue any part of the $7,000,000 bonds authorized in the F[illegible] of 1904. The company met all of its obligations during the year and, in addition, anticipated payment of notes secured by collateral trust bonds to the amount of $800,000. The total assets are valued at $52,798,571. President Smith sa[ys:]

The foreign business continues to grow and to show substantial returns, which encourages the company to further extend it. Plans are now under way looking to the establishment of branches in the Far East, including Japan, Korea, and China.

The outlook for business for the coming year is most encouraging. The amount of contracts and orders on the books of the company is larger than usual at this time of year. If our expectations as to earnings are realized we see no reason why the company should not begin to pay dividends on the preferred stock in the near future, though at a time it may be advisable to make them less than the full rate.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 7.—The money market is unsettled. Call loans, 5½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 4¾@5 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 4¾@5 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 4 per cent.; New York funds, 12½c discount; clearings, $28,987,340; balances, $2,699,625; Sub-Treasury debit, $71,922. For the week: Clearings, $171,380,879; balances, $12,086,583.

The stock market was rather heavy. The Boston coppers were somewhat easier to-day; there was a little realizing, and the heaviness of the New York list affected prices here. Montana Coal and Coke was taken in hand and put up.

Demand for bank stocks has shown some little new activity during the week. Sales are reported as follows: Sixty-four shares of Merchants' National at 202½@202¾, 50 Freeman's National at 103½, 28 Boylston National at 100@101, 8 State National at 150½, 5 First National (Ayer, Mass.,) at 175¼, 1 Second National at 217, 13 Fourth National at 139, and 1 Old Boston National at 104½.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE

Depressing Effect on Stocks Exerted by Money Movements.

Russian Loan News Unfavorably Received in all Centres—Decline in British Rails Sets In, Americans Holding Their Own.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. (Copyright, 1905.)

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Monetary considerations have controlled the stock markets this week. London investors and speculators have been speculating on an early advance in the Bank rate to 5 per cent., and with that in mind have been little inclined to make purchases. This week's Bank return seems to justify to some extent the apprehension of dearer money.

During the week £245,000 in gold was taken for export and a million in sovereigns has been transferred to the credit of the Indian currency department. More than a million in coin has gone into internal circulation, and the note circulation has expanded by more than £500,000. The result of these operations is that the Bank reserve is reduced £2,800,000. It now stands at 38⅜ per cent. of liabilities, which is lower than it has been before at this date for a good many years.

It is said that the future of the market depends on the American demand for gold which, it is thought, should immediately abate somewhat and possibly be diverted to some extent to the Bank of France.

British Government stocks have fallen away considerably under the menace of a monetary stringency. Consols have taken the course predicted several weeks ago and come within a small fraction of touching 88. All other gilt-edged stocks are down, many of them suffering substantial losses.

Foreign Governments, with few exceptions, are lower than last week. The announcement that a big Russian loan is proposed caused a perceptible weakening in the foreign section of the markets, not only in London but also in Continental centres.

Even British rails, which lately had been holding up extraordinarily well on the strength of good traffic returns, yielded this week, so that practically every quoted stock closed under last Saturday's figures.

American rails make rather a better showing, the number of gains for the week equaling the number of losses. The market, however, has been somewhat depressed the last two days. Usual gloom pervaded the Kafir Circus.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Money was in active demand and scarce in the market to-day. Apparently the Bank of England had absorbed the millions in dividends distributed and was taking steps to maintain discount rates, which were firmer.

On the Stock Exchange business was dull and nominal, partly owing to its being the eve of the settlement, while the scare regarding the monetary outlook caused gloom in most sections. The present tightness of money is not regarded as extraordinary, considering the requirements for crop moving and other annual needs early in October. Consols and home rails were quiet.

Americans opened firm, eased somewhat, fluctuated, and closed above the lowest quotations of the day. The other sections were quiet to dull. Business was mostly stagnant.

Japanese Imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 102.

Bullion amounting to £400,000 was withdrawn from the Bank of England to-day for shipment to Egypt.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 7.—New York exchange was at par; time and call loans, 4@5 per cent.

Business on the local Exchange was fairly well distributed over the list during the short session to-day, and price changes were of minor importance. Box Board preferred, as usual, contributed most of the activity, the price ranging between 14 and 14½. Northwestern Elevated preferred was firm at 63, and Metropolitan preferred lost a point, at 70. Quaker Oats common was dealt in at 104@104½.

Subway went at 56¼ to the accompaniment of sharp reiterations to the effect that the principal Eastern financial interests in the company will supplant A. G. Wheeler in the Tunnel Company's affairs with another man. The list:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 7.—The local market had comparatively little doing in stocks, and it was said the anticipation of the Jewish fast day was restricting business. The leading arbitrage stocks were generally lower in sympathy with New York quotations, while the purely local issues closed without noteworthy change. The bond business, however, was fairly active for a half holiday, and prices were firm. The market closed dull and steady. The list:

The Pacific Coast Casualty Company has applied for admission to the State of Missouri.

The Western Union (fire underwriters) has issued a notice to the companies that hereafter insurance on retail lumber yards will be written under floating, or schedule, policies, the same as grain elevators. This is to permit lumber companies, which often own strings of yards in various parts of the State, to insure them all under a schedule. The new rates, rules, and forms of the Western Union went into effect Oct. 1. They are so numerous and so important that most of the union companies are getting out circulars to their agents, notifying them of the changes, pointing out their importance and suggesting that special efforts be made now to secure a full share of the more profitable business.

Two new fire insurance corporations are announced. One is to be known as the German Home Insurance Company of Denver, and will have a capital of $200,000 and a surplus of $100,000. Its President will be H. T. Lamey and its Secretary F. H. Rhodes. The other is being organized, with $200,000 capital, under the style of the People's Fire Insurance Corporation of Norfolk, Va., and with these officers: President—T. F. Rogers; Vice President—R. A. Wainwright; Secretary—E. P. Crockett.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS

Silk and Cops Both Dutiable at Compound Rates—Other Decisions.

In a decision by W. B. Howell, Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a claim filed by [illegible] Mommer of New York and held that Collector Stranahan was justified in assessing compound duties on silk imported on cops. It was maintained by the importers that the Collector should have assessed duty on the spun silk, excluding the weight of the cops on which the silk was wound. The board finds that this contention is without merit, and therefore overrules the protest.

Other importers' claims overruled were filed by Zimmerman & Meyer and others, J. Zimmermann & Co., Morris Goldberg and others, A. & H. Veith, Adolph Strauss & Co., J. A. Deknatel & Son, Veit, Son & Co., Wallace L. Gough, Cusenier Company, John J. Robinson, and Wells, Fargo & Co., New York; the Kipp Brothers Company, Indianapolis; the American Express Company and K. Abiko, San Francisco; F. B. Vandegrift & Co., Philadelphia, and the Chicago Mercantile Company and Gage Brothers & Co., Chicago.

The board sustained claims made by the American Express Company, (3,) Sullivan, Drew & Co., and Judkins, McCormick & Co., New York; Englehart-Davison Mercantile Company, St. Joseph, and Leboit & Co., Chicago.

Claims partially sustained were by Adolph Strauss & Co., E. A. Morrison & Co. and others, A. Bader & Co., and B. Gunthel, New York, and the Theodore Ascher Company, Chicago.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

The week's reports have shown a steady increase in the number of transactions, and at the same time have involved a wider range of properties. Flat and tenement speculation still predominates, but not to the extent it did a month ago.

The larger operators and officers of the speculative corporations are all in an unusually hopeful and businesslike frame of mind for this season, and if the negotiations which some of them have on hand result successfully, the interval between now and Jan. 1 is likely to be productive of more than the average number of important deals. The City Investing Company's purchase of properties on Greenwich and Washington Streets, near Cortlandt Street, marks the entrance of that corporation into a new field of operations. The announcement is made that this transaction is purely speculative, but this company's buying heretofore has been so absolutely confined to gilt-edged parcels that this deal for property in the middle of a somewhat obscure downtown block has aroused not a little curiosity.

In the middle section of the city, from Twenty-third to Forty-second Street, several purchases have indicated that there is a lively interest in small parcels of moderate value, yet close enough to high-priced parts of Broadway and Fifth Avenue to hold out some speculative attractions. On Twenty-third Street, just east of Third Avenue, the sight was bought for a new ten-story loft building, a type of structure which, rented for light manufacturing purposes, has met with a good deal of success in the neighborhood.

Apartment houses of the better grade seem to be experiencing an improved demand. On Morningside Heights a buyer was found for a new elevator structure on 112th Street; corner properties on St. Nicholas and Seventh Avenues changed hands, and at Amsterdam Avenue and 143d Street, a seven-story building was taken over by an investor. Several sales were also reported from that part of Seventh Avenue, between 116th and 125th Streets, the purchasers in most cases announcing their intention of remodeling the buildings by putting in stores.

It may have been merely a coincidence, but the week's news has shown to a remarkable degree how much real estate business is being provided nowadays by the automobile trade. Scarcely a day passes without the leasing of some building for a garage, or of some plot as the site for one. Much of this activity has to do with properties in the area, now hopelessly "garaged," north of Times Square. The automobile industry, however, possibly because it deals in something that furnishes quick transportation, shows no disposition to confine itself to any small or well defined section. One company has just taken for ten years a new building at Broadway and Sixty-fourth Street, and, at Central Park West and 110th Street, the entire block owned by the Hartley estate has been leased to a concern for improvement with a large structure for the housing of motor vehicles.

Broadway Buildings to be Sold.

Two notable Broadway business buildings, Aldrich Court and the Columbia Building, will be put up for sale on Oct. 25 by order of the executors of the estate of Elizabeth W. Aldrich. The Columbia Building is a thirteen-story office structure at the northwest corner of Broadway and Morris Street. Aldrich Court, the ten-story structure at 41, 43, and 45 Broadway, was the first structure in the world in which the principle of the cantilever bridge was used. William A. Cable was the architect of both buildings, which run through the block to Trinity Place. Other lots included in the sale ordered by the executors of the Aldrich estate are 372, 600, 602 and 681 Broadway, 27, 31, 32, 82, and 84 Warren Street, 17, 19, 23, 25, and 27 Murray Street, 102 Chambers Street, 75 and 77 Leonard Street, 71 to 77 Worth Street, and 8 East Fourteenth Street. The sale will be conducted by Bryan L. Kennelly in the Real Estate Salesroom, at 14 Vesey Street.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The Fall season's first large offering of lots, that of the Varian estate property, had a thoroughly successful outcome. The sale, indeed, presented many features which are usually regarded as decidedly helpful to the auction branch of the market. The property itself could hardly be classed as gilt-edged, or of the kind to cause a scramble among speculators. It was essentially an offering for home seekers and small buyers generally. That by far the greater part of the property should have been disposed of to just this class of buyers argues well for the confidence of the general public in real estate at present, and is likely to lead to further offerings of similar character in the near future.

Important sales of vacant property are scheduled this week, affecting lots on Washington Heights as well as in the Bronx. Auctioneer Wells will offer on Tuesday, under partition decree, the Wolf estate holdings, consisting of about 110 lots on Walton and Sheridan Avenues and the Grand Boulevard and Concourse, just south of 174th Street. The sale will also include three lots running through from Boston Road to West Farms Road, near the 177th Street station of the Subway.

Sixty-two lots at Fort George, on St. Nicholas and Wadsworth Avenues, 191st, 192d, and 193d Streets, furnish the principal items in Wednesday's list. This sale will be conducted by L. J. Phillips & Co., who will also sell, on the following day, Bronx corners at Washington Avenue and 170th Street and at Fox and 167th Streets.

The unrestricted lot at 2 West Ninetieth Street, adjoining the corner of Central Park West, will be put up on Wednesday by Auctioneer Smyth, and on the same day Bryan L. Kennelly will offer the dwelling 38 West Fiftieth Street, Columbia College leasehold.

A sale of country property of more than ordinary importance is announced for Wednesday by James L. Wells. The offering consists of the country seat of the late Samuel B. Sexton, a tract of sixty acres, at Hyde Park, Dutchess County, facing the Hudson River, and lying between the properties of Frederick W. Vanderbilt and John S. Huyler.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT.—The wheat market on Saturday was somewhat irregular, but, on the whole, rather steady, closing practically unchanged from the previous night. On the 1 o'clock curb both December and May were quoted at 89⅞c. The bull party at Chicago was an open buyer on the early decline, which had resulted from unsatisfactory cables. Liverpool closed partly ⅛d net lower under the influence of predicted heavy Russian shipments, and this brought out considerable selling pressure at the opening in American markets, under which the list declined ¼@⅜c per bushel. The bull support proved effective, however, and the recovery which followed was maintained up to the close. Northwest receipts of 923,000 bushels were about the same as a year ago. Owing to a holiday last year at several Winter wheat points, comparisons with these figures were unsatisfactory. The Paris market closed 5@15 points lower, Berlin was ½@1 mark higher, and Budapest 8 points up. Broomhall estimated that world's shipments would be around 9,600,000 bushels for the week. No. 2 red at the close was quoted at 88¼c, elevator, and 80¼c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 90¾c, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, 91½c, free on board, afloat.

CORN.—Car shortage at Buffalo greatly strengthened the cash corn market at this point, but had little influence on futures, which ruled about steady in sympathy with the West, and closed practically net unchanged. The Missouri State report made corn condition 86 per cent. against 95 last month and 77 last year. A crop of 233,000,000 bushels was suggested, compared with 177,000,000 bushels last year. There was a moderate commission house demand at the West, and not much pressure on the market. No. 2 corn here was quoted at 59½c, elevator, and 60½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 61c, and No. 2 yellow, 61½c, free on board, afloat. The 1 o'clock curb close was unchanged.

OATS.—The market held about steady all day, and was fairly active at the West, with commission houses buying moderately. Cash oats locally closed as follows: Mixed, 26 to 32 lb, 32@33c; natural white, 30 to 32 lb, 32½@33½c, and clipped white, 36 to 40 lb, 35@36c.

COTTON.—The cotton market was fairly active for a half session, and while somewhat irregular, showed in the main a continued bearish leaning among local professionals. The opening was fairly steady at an advance of 1@8 points, which was fully as good as due on the lower cables, and prices worked up a point or two following the call. A renewal of bear pressure and liquidation soon caused a break to a net loss of 8@11 points, after which there was a rally on increased covering by week-end shorts, followed by a second setback and a barely steady close at a net decline of 1@7 points. Sales were estimated at 150,000 bales.

Due to come about 3@4 points lower, Liverpool closed at a decline of 7 points, and spot cotton in the English market was 10 points lower on sales of 7,000 bales. The weather map showed very favorable conditions in the South for the movement and maturing of late cotton, and the big estimates for Monday's receipts at leading points was a point in the bears' favor. It was reported that the October long interests had made a private settlement, turning over their spot supplies and long contracts to various spot people at a substantial discount from the current market quotation, but while usually relief from speculative strain is followed by a reaction this phase of the situation seemed to work no change in the general average of sentiment. Some private wires were received from the South claiming that the interior was a free seller at the decline on Friday night, but that offerings were light on Saturday. But the news from this direction was too conflicting to be of special value, and while some authorities contended that there was little demand from any source, others said that Continental spinners were good buyers and that American spinners were buying hedges in the local market.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 7.—Spot cotton, a fair business doing; sales, 7,000 bales; speculation and export, 500 bales; American, 6,000 bales. Receipts, 2,000 bales, none American; middling upland, 5.31d. Futures opened quiet, 5 points lower on near and 8 points lower on distant months; cloths quiet but steady, 7 points lower. October and October-November, 5.23; November-December, 5.27; December-January, 5.30; January-February, 5.33; February-March, 5.35; March-April, 5.37; April-May, 5.39; May-June, 5.41; June-July, 5.42, and July-August, 5.43.

COFFEE.—Opening steady at unchanged prices to an advance of 5 points, the coffee market ruled generally steady on good cables and additional reports from Brazil claiming that the prospects for the coming crop were deteriorating as a result of drouth. There was enough realizing for over the week-end to prevent any material improvement over the opening figures, however, and the market closed steady, net unchanged to 5 points higher. Sales were reported of about 28,000 bags. The day's crop news came in the shape of a cable from London, which reported that a Santos firm had cabled its correspondents there that prolonged dry weather was injuring the coming crop. Similar cables were received here on the previous day from usually conservative sources, and the general impression appears to be that some falling off has been experienced since the favorable advices received a week or ten days ago. Meanwhile the more bullish estimates of the present crop are being confirmed by various Brazilian authorities, and while at the moment receipts are running a little over those of a year ago, the total movement so far for the season is 450,000 bags behind that from last season's 10,000,000 bag crop, and there is therefore a very considerable discrepancy to be made up some time between now and the first of next July if the present yield is not to fall even below the current bullish estimates. Trade demand, however, is showing little improvement, and warehouse deliveries are disappointing, while of course the bulls are not able to distract attention entirely from the big surplus already available in consuming countries.

The spot market was steady, with quotations on the basis of 8 11-16c for Rio No. 7.

WEST STREET PROJECTS ATTRACT ATTENTION

Scheme Now Under Consideration for Big Warehouse at Duane Street—District in Which Dilapidated Structures Command High Rents.

West Street is contributing nowadays more than its share of the interesting developments of the real estate market. A few days ago, it was the new building to be erected at Cedar and West Streets by C. Howard Carroll, which will have a tower rising to a height of 404 feet, and which will be in the popular sense—that is, measured from the ground up—the tallest structure in the city. For some time there has been under discussion another remarkable building operation on West Street, the property involved being the block bounded by Washington and West, Reade and Duane Streets, and the form of improvement a mammoth cold-storage warehouse.

This project, it should be understood, has not yet passed out of the preliminary stage, but sketches have been prepared by architects, showing a fourteen-story structure of the character mentioned, and that the undertaking should be under consideration is of some significance as suggesting a possible type of improvement for properties close to the river front and near the terminals of the great railroads and steamship lines.

South of Cortlandt Street all recent tendencies have pointed toward West Street being gradually given over to office structures. North of that point, however, it is too remote from Broadway, and the building of tunnels to Jersey City, which will have their Manhattan terminals at least three or four blocks away from the river front, will deprive West Street of whatever prominence it may have derived from the North River ferries. But the great business interests in the territory between West and Greenwich Streets cannot be materially affected by the withdrawal of passenger traffic from the ferries. The vast army of produce dealers and commission men must remain close to the freight terminals of railroads and steamship lines, and with the city's growth and the consequent growth of this business, it is but natural that modern construction must eventually provide the adequate facilities for handling it.

What the volume of this business is appears only partially in the daytime. From midnight to 4 A. M., from Park Place north and from Greenwich to West Street, there is a congestion of merchandise and traffic that would baffle "McAdoo's Dragoons." To what extent demand for space exists in this district is shown by the fact that around Washington and Duane Streets from $4 to $5 a square foot is being paid for stores on month-to-month leases and without heat, light or any of the conveniences usually covered by rent.

Another curious fact in connection with the handling of this city's food supplies, and one upon which much stress is laid by the promoters of the West Street warehouse, is that New York ranks only fifth among the cities of the country in point of its cold storage facilities. Nobody has any satisfactory explanation to offer regarding this condition of affairs, but the produce dealers and the freight agents of the big railroads, who are familiar with the circumstances, seem to be agreed that there is a promising field for increased facilities of this kind.

The block bounded by Washington and West, Reade and Duane Streets, was owned by the city until about six years ago. At that time it was sold at auction by order of the Sinking Fund Commissioners, and after lively competition, in which the Erie Railroad's representatives took part, was struck down to Edward Roche for $453,000. The property measures about 70 by 270, and contains about 19,000 square feet, making the auction price at the rate of about $23 a square foot. Mr. Roche has received numerous offers for the block, but has shown no eagerness to sell, largely owing to the fact that the property yields a satisfactory return upon its cost, even with the dilapidated old buildings now on it.

Throughout this district much property is held by old and wealthy estates, which probably accounts for the inferior character of improvements and for the small number of properties which are on the market. There is apparently little or no speculative demand in the neighborhood, but the consideration in recent transactions seem low in view of the prevailing scale of rentals. For example, the southeast corner of Murray and West Streets, 44 by 50, sold two years ago for $55,000, and 110 Murray Street, 24 by 86.4, for $25,000. In 1902 the southwest corner of Washington and Murray Streets, 32 by 70, was transferred for $33,000. No. 155 West Street, 19.10 by 85, just north of Park Place, brought $20,400 at auction, and the price for 104 and 106 Murray Street, 48 by 89, at partition sale, was $50,000.

Discussion of New York Life's 2.3 Per Cent. Investment.

HIGH RETURN ON EQUITIES

Insurance Company Office Buildings—Downtown Structures Which Are Good "Payers."

The amazing disclosures of the week before the legislative investigating committee as to the inadequate returns derived by the New York Life Insurance Company from a good deal of its property have occasioned not a little discussion in real estate circles as to the company's methods of managing its holdings, and as to the whole question of the investment value of various classes of property in this city.

The testimony of Edward J. Devlin, head of the company's real estate department, as to the Yosemite apartment house, at Park Avenue and Sixty-second Street, will doubtless suggest to agents the one sure and safe process by which all properties on their books can be made great income producers. Mr. Devlin said that this building cost $1,009,866, and that the net income for last year, $26,444, showed a return of 2.7 per cent. on that figure. But it also appears that the company reduced the "value" of the property to $729,000, that the appraiser of the insurance Department had scaled this down still further to $480,000, and "that later it was appraised at $450,000, at which figure President McCall put it on the books." On this last valuation, Mr. Devlin said, the apartment house shows a net income of 5.87 per cent.

"Now," remarked an agent who had just finished reading this testimony, "I ought to have no more trouble in framing up attractive investments. If a man comes in and wants to know how to get 7 per cent. out of a property that is only paying 3½, why sit down and try to figure out how he can get higher rents or economize on his fixed charges and operating expenses? Just tell him to go home and do a few minutes' bookkeeping and convince himself that the property is worth only half what he paid for it."

THOSE 72D STREET APARTMENTS.

The showing made by the apartment house at 49 West Seventy-second Street, in which dwell many members of the McCall family, was surprising only in that it revealed the low rents paid by the relatives of the President of the New York Life in comparison with those of other tenants—$1,500 a year as against $1,800 and $2,400. West side agents, familiar with the property, say that, even aside from this favoritism in the matter of rents, they would have been surprised to learn that the building made any remarkable showing as an investment. The insurance company got it under foreclosure and then remodeled it almost to the point of complete reconstruction. This work alone took eight or nine months and must have added greatly to the building's cost.

"Without picking out special properties or making any exorbitant claim," said a prominent west side agent yesterday, "apartment houses in this section, if properly managed, yield from 10 to 11 per cent. gross and from 5 to 7 per cent. net income. This, of course, is on a free-and-clear basis—that is, assuming the property to be held without mortgage. With a 60 or 65 per cent. mortgage, the net income in many cases will show 8 or 9 per cent. on the equity.

Take, for example, a $100,000 property, free and clear, that is yielding $10,000 a year gross and $6,000 a year net. Now if a similar property, producing the same gross rental, be held subject to a mortgage of $65,000 at 4½ per cent., what was net income in the other case will be reduced by the amount of the interest on the mortgage, $2,925, leaving $3,075. But this is the income on the equity of $35,000 or about 8.8 per cent. Unless an owner has been outrageously 'stuck' on a property in the first place, there is no reason on earth for any west side apartment house, under the present excellent renting conditions, coming out at the end of a year with any such showing as 2.3 per cent."

Another agent on upper Broadway who has the management of a large number of west side apartments places the average net income of these properties at from 6 to 8 per cent.

"Of course, returns vary somewhat with the different classes of apartments," he added. "In general, I should say that the higher priced apartments are less productive than those with a moderate scale of rentals, because in the former the expenses of operation and service are relatively heavier. Furthermore, the fact that the building of five-story apartment houses without elevators has practically ceased throughout this part of the city, has worked to the advantage of the existing houses of this type, and they are among the best income producers of all. I am handling a couple of properties of this sort, which have shown for the last two years an annual net income of about 14 per cent."

INSURANCE COMPANY BUILDINGS.

The facts brought out by Inquisitor Hughes as to the office building operations of the New York Life have only borne out the popular impression that the great structures of the insurance companies have been far from attractive investments, and that to make any sort of a showing in this direction liberal allowances would have to be made both for the space in these buildings used by the companies themselves and for the element of advertising value.

To reason from the testimony concerning the insurance buildings to office structures generally would result in serious error. While, in point of percentage of income, it may safely be said that office buildings do not equal apartment houses, yet there are many tall buildings in the downtown district that are yielding from 4½ to 5½ per cent. net and several of the more prominent structures, such as the Broad-Exchange, Hanover Bank, and Bank of Commerce Buildings, are said to be excellent "payers."

"The trouble with most people, so far as their ideas of office building investments are concerned," remarked the agent for half a dozen of them, "is that they look at a building a week or a month after it has been finished and appear greatly disappointed not to find it fully tenanted. They seem to think that it ought to fill up like an east-side tenement.

"Given a reasonable length of time," he continued, "a well-advised office building operation will produce the very best kind of real estate investment. Once running smoothly, it is less bother than real estate of the same value in any other form, and there is considerably less loss through vacancies.

"The trouble with the insurance company buildings is that as a rule they are built upon the most spectacular and highest priced sites, with the spectacular feature carried out right through the scheme of construction. It is not to be wondered at that they show returns of 1½ and 2 per cent. You can line a building with Mexican onyx and bronze, if you have the money to pay for such things, but don't ever expect that you will get anybody to pay you 5 per cent. a year interest on the cost of such finishing.

"A word in favor of the insurance companies and their home office structures. From such figures as I have noticed, they are extremely modest in the amount of rent with which they charge themselves. What the reason for this is I don't know, but if the buildings were owned by outsiders they could never get the space which they occupy at any such figures as they allow for it in their reports."

SAVOY HOTEL

LONDON.

In May, 1904, the extensions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel were completed.

Never in the history of hotel life in any country has the appreciation of the public of the comfort and luxury provided for them been shown in a more substantial form. The best travellers from the Continent of Europe and America have pronounced the magnificent suites of rooms with bathrooms to be unrivalled—and their recommendation to friends has resulted in the large increase in business of 1904 over 1903 being greatly exceeded in the present year—thus showing that the more the public become familiar with the comforts and luxury of the hotel the greater is its popularity. The following figures show the increase in business during the London season:

MONTH.	Increase oi Receip.s of Hotel and Restaurant in 19 4 over 1903.	Increase of Receipts of Hot.l and Restaurant in 1905 over 1903.	Occupants of Apartments during month.
MAY..........	35 per cent.	69 per cent.	4,428	4,478	8,074
JUNE..........	49 " "	85 " "	4,695	6,033	10,131
JULY..........	50 " "	108 " "	2,779	5,921	9,681

18,807 more visitors patronized the Savoy Restaurant in May, June and July, 1905, than in the same months of 1903—and during the season space alone has prevented the entertainment of a greater number of guests who have desired to enjoy the finest cuisine in the world.

HENRY PRUGER, General Manager.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Heavy Loss in Cash Partly Offset by Reduction in Deposits—Surplus Now $4,286,175.

The loss in cash reported yesterday by the banks was in excess of Friday's estimate, a fact which was in marked contrast with the showing of the previous week. The outflow of cash reported amounted to $8,454,700, or more than the total surplus shown by the previous week's statement. There was, however, such a large decrease in deposits that the reduction in surplus was only $3,153,850, leaving the banks still in possession of $4,286,175 above legal requirements. The decrease in deposits amounting to $21,127,100 was nearly double the falling off in loans, which amounted to $11,889,400. By these fluctuations in the loan and deposit items they were brought practically to the same figures, both in round numbers standing at $1,059,000,000.

WAREHOUSING COTTON.

Southern Growers Want a System by Which They Can Hold Back the Staple.

The latest dream of Southern cotton growers—a dream they are confident of turning into a reality—is to establish a chain, a complete system, of cotton warehouses throughout the South. In other words, they want to put the storing of cotton on the same firm basis as the storing of grain. One of the enthusiastic devotees of the plan is Richard Edmonds, editor of The Manufacturers' Record. The other day, when he was in New York, he spoke of the many advantages the Southern States would reap if the scheme were put into effect.

"Now cotton is no collateral," said Mr. Edmonds. "The farmer has to sell it or go without money. The reason he can't borrow money on it is the lack of storage facilities. With a thousand bushels of wheat a man can go to a bonded warehouse, store his wheat, get a receipt, and put it up as collateral at any bank. The receipt is just as good collateral as stocks or bonds.

"Look at the difference between that system and the way cotton is kept. The cotton farmer, nine times out of ten, lets his bales stay outdoors—that is, if he keeps it at all. The rain falls on it and injures it, or fire may destroy it. If the owner takes out insurance, it is very costly. Nobody would lend money on cotton kept in that slipshod manner.

"Warehouses are necessary if the farmers are going to keep their cotton till it will bring the price it is worth. This year they have held it, but sentiment is mostly responsible for it. A wave of sentiment against selling cotton spread through the South this year. Circulars urging the farmers not to sell were sent out from the cities, and speakers were employed to go through the country and preach to the farmers, 'Hold your cotton.' In some places to sell cotton was to invite social ostracism.

"But, of course, that cannot be permanent, though it was effective enough for one year. To hold cotton the growers must have some sound system that will enable them to have money and keep cotton at the same time—for they must have money. The only solution that I see is the building of warehouses. Of course, it's a big proposition and will take time. But I am confident the dream will yet be realized."

Japanese Progress in Formosa.

A notable illustration of Japanese progress is given in a report just published on the recent trade of South Formosa. It is shown that of the total volume of the imports and exports last year Japan secured as much as 73 per cent., while China had only 13 per cent and the United Kingdom 6 per cent. Although the import trade from Japan was then sadly interrupted by the demands of the troops at the front and the disorganization of the coasting steamer service, the volume of business has increased marvelously since the year 1900. With regard to exports the Japanese monopoly is even more marked, for no less than 90½ per cent. of the trade was done with the Mikado's kingdom in 1904, and whereas foreign countries showed a decrease of £93,373 as compared with 1901, Japan revealed an increase of £378,494.—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEIGHBORS IN CUSTODY IN TRIPLE MURDER CASE

Police Think Man and Wife Can Tell About Middletown Crime.

Graham, a Farmer, Closely Questioned, but Released Because Authorities Cannot Break His Alibi.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Alanson Graham, a farmer, who lives near the Olney home, where Willis C. and Fred R. Olney, aged brothers, and little Alice Ingerick were killed on Friday, was taken into custody to-day. Mrs. Martin Ingerick, mother of the little girl, to-day declared he was responsible for the terrible beating that almost killed her. Late to-night he was released, Chief of Police Brinkerhoff and District Attorney Rogers saying they had no evidence to break the alibi he offered.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Davis, other neighbors, are held to-night by the police, on the ground that they can give important facts bearing on the case.

Mrs. Ingerick, the only person living of the four who were at the Olney place Friday, had a very bad night in the hospital. She did not show any sign of regaining consciousness. Her delirium increased, and at times she arose in bed and fought madly with her nurses.

A change in her condition came at 9 o'clock this morning, however, and consciousness returned. District Attorney Rogers, who had been waiting, was called to her bedside. Chief of Police Brinkerhoff and Detective Wood accompanied him.

Mr. Rogers questioned the woman, but got no answer for some time. Finally he asked:

"Do you know who hurt you?"

The woman nodded her head affirmatively.

"Was it Fred Olney?"

Mrs. Ingerick shook her head negatively.

Several other names were mentioned, and she shook her head each time until the name of Alanson Graham was mentioned. Then she nodded affirmatively.

Chief Brinkerhoff and Detective Wood rushed out, summoned two policemen, leaped into an automobile, and started for Howells, where Graham lives. The man had not previously been mentioned in the case except it had been stated that Mrs. Ingerick had kept house for him for a short time about six weeks ago.

The officers found Graham reading a newspaper. While the Chief and detective entered and engaged him in conversation the policemen slipped in the back way and began a search of the premises.

A piece from blue-striped overalls was found under the kitchen table. It was spattered with blood, evidently fresh. A series of copies of a Middletown newspaper were found of recent date, with only one missing, that of Sept. 15. A copy of this paper of the date of Sept. 15 was found wrapped around the iron pipe which was used to beat Alice Ingerick and her mother.

Graham was then taken to Middletown, and the officers then returned to the Graham house and made a thorough search. His bed up stairs was nicely made up, but when the quilts were pulled down, the under sheet was found to have two large blood stains on it. In the kitchen, hanging over the stove on a line, was a towel of the same kind as was found under the head of the murdered girl in the Olney house. It had blood spots on it, not entirely dried.

No weapons were found in the house except a single-barreled shotgun which had not been used in a long time. A double-barreled shotgun which Graham is said to have had could not be found, though a box of shells apparently for it lay in a bureau drawer.

The neighbors of Graham were greatly surprised at his arrest.

Investigations to-day show that Graham was formerly attentive to Mrs. Ingerick. He objected strongly when she left his house to go to keep house for the Olneys. He went several times to the Olney house to induce Mrs. Ingerick to return to his home.

Graham was employed by Piercey G. Wragge, a New York man, whose farm adjoins Graham's. On Friday he walked about the place all the morning, and after dinner, or at about 1:30 P. M., it is declared, he disappeared, and did not return until milking time. At that time he did his usual work in his accustomed way.

On the day before the murder Graham engaged Miss Emma Shaw of Howells to go to his house to can some quinces. She was accompanied by Mrs. Maggie St. John of Middletown. Saying something about dinner, Graham went into the yard with his overalls on and killed a chicken, which he took into the house and threw on the floor, and then went any lay down in a bed downstairs.

Lulu Ingerick, daughter of the injured woman, who was away from home on the day of the murders, said after the arrest:

"We went to live with Graham about Sept. 15. He was always kind to me, but cranky toward my sister.

"Once when we lived with Graham before he had four cats around. One day when he was working in the yard with a hammer and chisel one of the cats rubbed against his leg. Grabbing the animal around the body, he drove the chisel through it and pinned it to the ground. A little later Graham took another of the cats and cut it's head off with a hatchet."

The girl declared that Graham threatened her mother several times.

Graham was subjected to a thorough examination by the police and District Attorney. He declared that the blood-spots found about his house were due to his slaughter of cats and chickens. He also had an explanation to offer for all his movements on the day of the murder and Mrs. Henry Davis, who lived between Graham and the Olneys, woh had told of visits by Graham to Olney house, were also brought here and closely questioned.

A great crowd gathered about the Court House all afternoon and evening, awaiting some statement by the officials. There was much excitement at 11 o'clock when Graham was brought into the court-room and immediately set at liberty.

District Attorney Rogers explained that Graham's alibi was explicit and no evidence had been found to break it. Mr. and Mrs. Davis, however, would be held until to-morrow at least, he said, as undoubtedly they could tell something of importance.

Other clues have been followed to-day, in every case worthless.

Lulu Ingerick visited her mother in the hospital this afternoon and asked if the woman knew her. Mrs. Ingerick said: "It's Lulu." She is being closely watched, in hopes that she may be able to make some statement.

ROCKEFELLER AS A FARMER.

Proud of His Work—Asks the Good-Will of Men.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 8.—John D. Rockefeller publicly declared to-day that his ambition in life is to have good-will toward all men and to possess the solee of the good-will of all men.

This statement was made in the course of his address to the Sunday school of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church. He prefaced his five minutes' talk with the statement that he had just harvested 3,000 bushels of oats from his fields in the vicinity of Forest Hill, and that he was exceedingly proud of his ability as a farmer. From this statement he drew the attention of his hearers to other crops which should be worked with exceeding toward all men and to possess the solace and under all conditions.

"There is the crop of patience which will thrive and bring results not only in Cleveland, but also in crowded New York," he said. "Then there is charity, which will also flourish anywhere upon the earth.

"The crop which I consider and have always thought to be the most precious, bringing as it does the greatest comfort to mankind, is good-will to all men. I say to you that we must practice it toward all, toward every man we meet.

"I cannot impress this too strongly on your minds, for this has been my great ambition. It is the greatest comfort of mankind. It is the great ameliorating balm which heals the wounds of the world and which with brotherly love makes life worth living. Its harvest is the solace of the good-will of all men. It pays better than gold, silver, iron or coal mines. It is more valuable than all that comes from the earth. It will bring that which can be gained in no other way."

"I have been so blessed this Summer that I feel like a sponge—I have taken in so much. But be like a pump—give out as much as you take in. Take blessings in, draw them up, and then push them along to some one else. This state of things will make heaven right here on earth for all of us. Remember that."

JOHN W. GATES IN COURT.

Gets Chauffeur Off—No Vile Talk, but Some Hard Swearing, He Says.

John W. Gates was a witness in the Yorkville Court yesterday morning, together with two Wall Street brokers—Alpheus Hudson of 500 Madison Avenue and Alfred Dryer of 142 West Seventy-ninth Street—in behalf of Francis Miles, Mr. Gates's chauffeur.

Miles was arrested on Saturday afternoon at the East Thirty-fourth Street Ferry by Policeman Ryan and charged with violating the traffic regulations. According to Ryan, Miles, who was driving a big automobile, in which were Mr. Gates and the two brokers, on their way to the Belmont Park races, refused to take his place in the long line of vehicles waiting to go across to Long Island City, and insisted on running the machine ahead and dodging it into a thirty-foot space up near the ferry entrance which had been reserved for an ambulance that had responded to a hurry call.

"Not only did Miles refuse to take his place in the line," declared Ryan, "but the three other men in the automobile swore at me, used vile language in such a manner as to attract a crowd, and, telling me that I was 'too fresh,' threatened to have me 'broke.' Mr. Hudson jumped out of the automobile in a threatening manner to take my number. Then Miles humped the machine into me twice.

Mr. Gates went on the stand and declared that he had not heard any foul language used.

Mr. Hudson and Mr. Dryer also denied that there had been any vile language used.

Magistrate Whitman discharged the prisoner, saying that he thought the policeman had failed to make out a case of violation of the traffic regulations. Thereupon Ryan exclaimed:

"Your Honor, I can bring a number of witnesses who will testify that these men used profane and vile language to me if you want me to."

The Magistrate didn't indicate whether he wanted to hear the witnesses or not. When Lawyer Hummel entered the Magistrate looked up and asked:

"What case are you interested in, Mr. Hummel?"

"We won't dignify it by calling it a case," was the lawyer's reply.

CANED BY A WOMAN.

Everybody in Broadway, Except the Police, Saw Young Man's Plight.

In the crowd that was in Times Square near Forty-fourth Street last evening were a well-dressed young man and young woman. The two were quarreling, and the man was begging the woman to let him alone.

"Please don't worry me any more," he said.

"You are no good," answered the woman. Then she seized his cane and gave him a sharp whack across the back. The man ran, but the nimble young woman caught him before he had gone twenty steps and gave him another sharp whack across the shoulders. The crowd closed in, but no policeman appeared.

Then the woman made another attack upon the man. She followed him to a point about fifty feet east of Broadway, and just as the man was opposite a big touring automobile that was standing alongside the curb gave him another resounding whack. The young man was knocked down, and rolled almost under the automobile. When he got up this time he took to his heels with a vengeance and sprinted east in Forty-fourth Street. The woman followed him, but her skirts kept her from catching him.

The man soon lost her, and, reaching Sixth Avenue, turned south.

Driver's Turn to Save Children Was Old Ned's End.

Old Ned, one of the best-known horses in the Fire Department, died last night that the lives of several children might be saved. Truck Company No. 50 was going to a fire at 3,961 Third Avenue. As the truck swung along the avenue, Joseph Johnson, the driver, saw in front of his three horses a group of children, paralyzed with fright, who could be saved only by a sharp turn.

He swung the horses on to the sidewalk, and Ned, the near horse, tripped against the curb and fell with a broken leg. The truck came to a sudden halt, but none of the men was hurt. The suffering of the injured horse was pitiful, and a policeman shot him while the firemen turned their heads away.

Ned had been in the service for fifteen years, and had made several record runs. The fire, which was in the tailoring store of Ilyman Zuckerman, did only $5 damage.

NO WORD FROM HUGHES, BUT HALPIN LOOKS BLUE

General Belief That the Lawyer Will Decline to Run.

ELSBERG A PROBABLE VICTIM

Odell Expected To-day to Make a Final Effort, but it Seems Hopeless in Advance.

Charles E. Hughes, whom the leaders of the Republican organization in this city have had nominated for Mayor without going through the formality of first asking his consent, was left in peace by the politicians yesterday to consider the situation. Mr. Hughes went to church in the morning and spent the rest of the day at home.

He did not indicate by so much as a look whether he would or would not accept the nomination. He merely reiterated that he would make his decision known to the Republican Notification Committee when it calls to-day.

Chairman William Halpin of the Republican County Committee did not hear from Mr. Hughes all day, and said so. Mr. Halpin spoke to reporters hopefully of Mr. Hughes's probable acceptance, but he looked blue and ill at ease, and his face belied the roseate promise of his words.

Mr. Halpin declared that there was no wish to take Mr. Hughes from his work as counsel to the Insurance Investigating Committee. If only he would accept, the sole work that would be expected of him throughout the campaign would be the writing of a letter of acceptance.

Mr. Hughes, with immovable countenance, parried reporters with this statement:

"In accordance with my agreement with the sub-committee of the notification committee, I shall not make known my decision until I meet the whole committee to-morrow. The committee has refrained from calling on me, and it is only fair to its members that I wait until our arranged meeting before saying a single word on the subject.

"In the last two days I have received a large number of letters and telegrams from friends and men of prominence. Some urged me to accept the nomination; others asked that I decline it."

The Notification Committee, of which Attorney General Julius M. Mayer is Chairman, will meet Mr. Hughes to-day at noon at his residence, 550 West End Avenue.

This is what Mr. Halpin said:

"I have not met Mr. Hughes to-day, nor have I heard anything from him.

"There is nothing for me to say about the situation, except that if Mr. Hughes accepts the nomination, the only work the Republicans will require of him will be his letter of acceptance. We do not wish him to take one more minute from the work of counsel to the committee investigating insurance conditions, in which he is now engaged.

"Others will do the hard work of the campaign for him. In other words, his campaign will be handled as would be that of a soldier at the front, who was nominated while fighting the battles of his country."

The honor of making the notification speech at the Hughes residence will be awarded this morning just before the start for West End Avenue is made.

Some of the Republican district leaders make no secret of their feeling that they will be "way up in a balloon" if Counsel Hughes should fling back their nomination to-day. Nobody was talking about the other nominees, Young and Wells. The great issue was "Will Hughes accept?" Mr. Young, named for Controller, is believed to be waiting to see what Hughes will do.

The committee to fill vacancies is primed to assemble on the instant if Mr. Hughes shall say that he cannot make the run. Meantime, it was said last night that State Chairman Odell will come from Newburg to-day to add by indirection whatever inducement he has in his power to have Mr. Hughes keep the nomination thrust upon him.

In the event of Mr. Hughes's refusal the organization is likely to turn to Senator Nathaniel A. Elsberg as the candidate. He may have to accept the nomination if Hughes declines.

Another matter that is troubling the Republicans is the lack of money for campaign purposes. Louis Stern, the Treasurer of the Republican State and County Committee, is in Europe, and will not return for two or three weeks. There is little money left from the last year's campaign. No circular letter has yet been sent to voters announcing the days of registration. Senator Platt was always the money raiser for the committee. This year he is taking no interest in the campaign, unless it be an interest in seeing the present Republican management defeated. Senator Depew is out of it entirely, and E. H. Harriman is in Japan.

NEYS TO BONAPARTE—HELP!

Descendants of Napoleon's Marshals, Scores of Them, Ask Aid.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—Secretary Bonaparte, grandnephew of Napoleon I., has come to the conclusion that all his grandduncle's Marshals either died poor or left descendants who ran through the family funds.

Hardly a day passes that he does not receive a letter from France informing him that the writer is a descendant of one of Napoleon's Marshals; that he has read in the Paris papers of Mr. Bonaparte's great fame and consequence in America, and that he knows nothing will please the Secretary of the Navy more than to extend a little financial assistance for the sake of old times at Marengo and Austerlitz.

Most of these appeals come from descendants of Marshal Ney. The Secretary is fast becoming convinced that Ney was the original anti-rate sulcide apostle of France, so great is their number. Each of these letters reminds the Secretary that his grandduncle styled Ney "the bravest of the brave," and recalls the fact that on the return from Elba Ney, when sent against Napoleon, turned his arms over to the Emperor. They point out that this service was of inestimable value to Napoleon and delicately suggest that his grandnephew may feel like liquidating a part of the debt.

One of the letters comes from a Ney who has served in the French Army. He incloses a brilliantly colored portrait of himself, illustrious in baggy trousers of a bright red hue.

CONEY ISLAND TRAIN AFIRE.

Trolley Wire Breaks, Igniting the Platform of a Crowded Car.

A Manhattan-bound Coney Island train was moving rapidly up the Fifth Avenue incline at Thirty-sixth Street, Brooklyn, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon and was within 100 yards of the point where the road changes from the overhead trolley to the third-rail system, when the trolley wire broke. The live ends of the wire fell on the front of the second car in the train, burning up the platform, and causing a panic not only in that car, but in all the others of the train. In the scramble to get out four persons were hurt seriously enough to necessitate their being attended by ambulance surgeons, while a score of others were slightly injured.

The train was crowded, and many passengers were standing. The train was making good time, and was almost at the top of the incline when there was a loud report. A moment later the top and front platform of car No. 2 was a mass of flames.

The passengers stampeded, and there were shouts and screams and a general struggle to get out of the train. The trainmen were powerless, and shout as they would the passengers refused to pay the least attention to them.

When finally a semblance of order was restored it was found that Mrs. Charles Diesbeck of 159 West Fortieth Street and Mrs. Julia O'Connell of 28 Renwick Street, Manhattan, and Mrs. Kate Dillon of 113 Raymond Street and John Cryan of 326 Bergen Street, Brooklyn, had been seriously injured. All had severe contusions, besides suffering from shock. After they were attended by Dr. Livingston from the Norwegian Hospital they were sent to their homes.

The house of Engine Company 128 is about four blocks from where the accident occurred, and Capt. McCue, who saw the electrical display, ordered his company to the scene without waiting for the alarm. The police reserves from the Fourth Avenue Police Station, under Capt. Evans, were also called out.

After the people had been got out of the cars, many of them complained that during the rush they had lost their watches and other valuables. The road was blocked for an hour after the trolley wire snapped.

WOMEN MORTALLY HURT.

Thrown from Their Carriage at Quaker Hills—Brought Here.

Gulielma Aiken, who is more than 70 years old, and Cornelia Taylor, 52 years old, two maiden ladies living at Quaker Hills, N. Y., were driving at that place yesterday afternoon when their horse became frightened at an engine on the New York Central Railroad and ran away, throwing both women on to the railroad tracks.

They were picked up unconscious and hurried to this city. Dr. Birdsall of Paterson, N. J., the railroad physician at that place, boarded the train there, after telephoning Dr. Tod Helmuth of Flower Hospital to have ambulances in waiting at the Grand Central Station upon the arrival of the train.

At the hospital it was found that Miss Aiken was suffering from a fractured skull, a fracture of the upper jaw, and general contusions. She will probably die. Miss Taylor is suffering from a fractured skull, a fractured thigh bone, scalp wounds, and general contusions. She has a chance of recovery.

GIRLS HURLED FROM TRESTLE.

Princeton Students Pull Them Out of the Water Unhurt.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, Oct. 8.—Two young Princeton girls had a wonderful escape from what appeared to be certain death this afternoon when they were hurled from a forty-foot trestle by a rapidly moving engine. Nellie and Frances Vanderberg, aged 12 and 14, started to walk across the long trestle of the Pennsylvania Railroad about half a mile from Princeton, where a new track is being built. As they got near the middle of the trestle the crowd saw the work engine come rapidly around the cut, and yelled to the children to run.

They were so terror-stricken that they did not move, and the cowcatcher hurled them over the edge of the trestle. Luckily, they were knocked off just above the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and their fall was broken by the water. Several Princeton students pulled the girls out of the water, and found that they were not even bruised. They were only suffering from fright.

PANIC STOPPED WITH A CLUB.

Policeman Keeps Men Back While Women Leave a Burning House.

But for the presence of mind of Policeman Green of the Liberty Avenue Station a number of women and children would have been trampled to death last night at a fire in the four-story tenement house 437 Watkins Street, East New York.

The fire was started in the apartments of Michael Duner by the overturning of a candle while the family was at prayer in a neighboring synagogue. The flames soon spread throughout the apartment. Policeman Green ran up the stairs to assist the frightened tenants to the street. The halls were filled with panic-stricken women and children. Instead of aiding them the men brushed them aside and knocked some of them down in their efforts to get out. Green drew his club and, driving the men into a corner, kept them there until the women and children were safely out. The house was wrecked.

GOULD HAS ENOUGH PROXIES.

Pittsburg Friends of Ramsey Admit It—Some Neutrals in Fight.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 8.—It is conceded here to-night by friends of Joseph Ramsey that George Gould has obtained a sufficient number of proxies to name his board if the election is held at the Toledo meeting Tuesday.

Among the stockholders are said to be some who have refused to vote their stock. Kirk Q. Bingham, formerly Councilman, and a stockholder, when asked if he had given his proxy to Ramsey as he had done heretofore, said:

"While I am financially interested in the Wabash Railroad, I have not given my proxy to any one, nor am I going to Toledo to vote it. I have not taken any hand in the fight."

PLATT CALLS A POWWOW ---BRING YOUR KNIVES

A Summons to All the State to Talk Things Over.

THINKS ODELL VULNERABLE

The Defeat of Hasbrouck Has Given the Chairman's Opponents a Line on the Situation.

Senator Thomas Collier Platt is sending out the following letter to leaders, lieutenants, and recognized party workers of high calibre wherever they may be found in the sixty-one counties of the State:

No. 49 Broadway, New York.
Oct. —, 1905.

If convenient please call at my office at — o'clock — morning.

If the date will not suit your convenience notify, stating objections. T. C. PLATT.

Scores of these have gone out from the place which for so many years has afforded a meeting place for Republican leaders. Most of last week these letters were being sent. It may be found that some useful Republicans have been overlooked. If so, their letters will be mailed at once, and if they view with a kindly eye the invitation of the senior Senator, they will be wending their way to 49 Broadway before the week is out.

Beginning with this week—perhaps to-day, and certainly to-morrow—it is confidently expected that the office of the Tioga chieftain will assume some of its oldtime political atmosphere.

The invitation is being taken by its recipients in only one way. Senator Platt has put on eagle feathers, mixed gallons of war paint, sharpened his tomahawk, and is calling the Republican warriors to ask them, "Will you help to dethrone Odell?"

There are those who say the Senator is satisfied that he must fight Gov. Higgins with Odell; that he cannot elect his time to fight them separately, and he knows it. But it is recognized that the chief object of attack the Senator has in view just now is Odell.

The success of Executive Chairman Barnes and ex-Gov. Black in bringing about the defeat of Justice Gilbert D. B. Hasbrouck of Ulster in the Third Judicial District Convention at Albany on Thursday has encouraged all the opponents of the State Chairman to believe that he can be dethroned, and this is the time to set about doing it. The holders of State offices having patronage at their disposal will be invited to come off the fence and turn in against Odell. If the response is encouraging, and it is believed it will be, the fight will begin in earnest.

Platt men say that if need be they can marshal at the outset against Odell the two United States Senators, ex-Gov. Black, National Committeeman Ward of Westchester, and such leaders as Dwight of Tompkins, Dunn of Broome, Fassett of Chemung, Barnes of Albany, Ray of Chenango, Krum of Schoharie, to say nothing of a score or more in the second division.

Senator Malby, Senator Raines, and Speaker Nixon have stood by Odell faithfully, and the Platt people haven't much hope of enlisting their material aid.

TOURING CAR BLOWS UP.

Children Knocked Down, Windows Broken, and Costly Machine Wrecked.

The explosion of the gasoline tank of a $10,000 touring car belonging to Paul McCormack of 316 West Ninety-fifth Street late yesterday afternoon caused considerable damage and gave Mr. McCormack's neighbors a fright. Mr. McCormack was driven the car up to his home and had gone inside for a moment. He had scarcely entered the house before the storage tank blew up with a report that could be heard for several blocks, and the machine was hurled forty feet down the street.

The explosion knocked down several children who were playing in the street and broke many windows in the neighborhood. It destroyed every movable thing in the machine and set fire to the car.

Policeman Delaney heard the report and turned in a fire alarm. The firemen put out the blaze with hand grenades. Before the firemen came, however, Mr. McCormack ran into the street and tried with his bare hands to put out the flames. His hands were severely burned.

FIGHT WITH ROUGHS AT ZOO.

Young Men Were Teasing a Bear When the Keepers Interfered.

The bears in the Zoological Gardens in Bronx Park have been having a warm time with the visitors recently. One of the animals had his leg pulled yesterday afternoon in a way that he will not forget for some time.

Two or three young roughs from the east side seized the bear's paw, which was protruding through the railings, and pulled it until the animal acreamed with pain. Keepers Mulvihill and Schlosson went to the rescue of the bear and tackled the toughs. The crowd joined in and took sides against the keepers. As usual when there is any trouble in the park, there were no policemen in sight. The roughs got away.

While the fight was on somebody set fire to some rubbish, which blazed up and nearly caused a panic among the women and children. When all was over two policemen came up and acattered a few law-abiding men who had been putting out the fire.

YALE FRESHMEN RIOTOUS.

Throw Water and Blazing Paper on a Passerby—Arrests Promised.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 8.—Several freshmen of Yale University will be arrested to-morrow on charges of breach of the peace and disorderly conduct, as the result of wild pranks which they carried out to-night in the vicinity of Pierson Hall, the freshman stronghold of the college settlement.

They jumped on and ran trolley cars, drove a policeman from the beat, and frightened several women almost into hysterics. Blank cartridges were shot off and buckets of water and bundles of blazing paper were thrown from the rooms on the third and fourth floors of Pierson Hall on the heads of passersby. For nearly two hours the students blocked York Street and allowed nothing except trolley cars to go through it, and these on an irregular schedule.

Complaint was made to-night and warrants have been drawn for the arrest of several of the alleged leaders of the disturbance. A squad of fifteen policemen finally quelled the boisterous outbreak, but made no arrests to-night. Four policemen smashed the doors of Pierson Hall, but groped through the dormitory in darkness and failed to lay hands on a student.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 8.—Advices from Japan say the official returns of the casualties of the Japanese Army throughout the war show that 46,180 were killed, 10,970 died from wounds, and 15,300 died from disease, a total of 72,450 dead.

ARREST PRESIDENT'S CALLER.

Nadate Doren of New York Wanted to Plead for Russian Jews.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—A young woman, who says she is Nadate Doren, a Russian Jewess, from New York City, was arrested here to-day while distributing circulars at the entrance of St. John's Church, at Sixteenth and H Streets. She has been in Washington since Thursday, and on several occasions had visited the White House in an effort to see the President.

The police say she visited President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay and had given him a book dealing with the religious and political conditions in Russia. To the matron of the House of Detention she said she was simply earnest in her efforts to get the President's aid in helping the oppressed Jews of her native land.

The Largest Real Estate Owner in Charleston Kills Himself.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Oct. 8.—Lee Loeb, a retired merchant, and owner of over 200 pieces of real estate, killed himself this morning. Nervous prostration had caused his retirement from business some time ago, and he had returned from a sanitarium in the past week.

He was the largest owner of real estate in Charleston, and was 58 years of age. He leaves a widow. The Coroner's jury gave "melancholy" as the cause of the act.

GIRL STUDENT MISSING.

Miss Renart of Suffalo Fails to Reach Baltimore College.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 8—Up to a late hour to-night officials of the Woman's Medical College here had received no word from the missing Teresa Renart of Buffalo, who left her home last Monday to come to Baltimore to resume her studies.

At the house where the young woman boarded last term no word has been received from her since she started from Buffalo. Members of her family in Buffalo are fearful of foul play. She was well supplied with money. Dr. S. Griffith Davis, Dean of the college, scouts the suggestion of suicide.

RACE HORSES IN A WRECK.

Carload of Them Destroyed—Three Men Killed on Pennsylvania.

Special to The New York Times.

MILLERSBURG, Penn., Oct. 8.—Three trainmen were killed, one man was injured, and a carload of race horses owned by Eastern men and bound for the Bloomsburg Fair were destroyed in a collision at the junction of the Lykens Valley Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad near this place to-day.

The fast mail train for Erie was preceded out of Harlsburg by a fast freight train, which, owing to a heavy fog, lost some time. Its caboose and a box car containing the horses accidentally uncoupled at the junction, and the mail train overtook them. Charles E. Berry and Ralph Hendershott were in the caboose and were killed. Fireman Theodore Scott of the mail train was hurled into the midst of the wreck and also was killed.

There were 200 passengers on the mail train, but none was seriously hurt.

FLEET VISITORS DUCKED.

Half a Dozen Thrown Into the Water by the Breaking of a Gang Plank.

Half a dozen men and women who went to the foot of West Seventy-ninth Street at 8 o'clock last night in the crowd of sightseers attracted by the eight battleships of Admiral Evans's fleet, were plunged into the river through the breaking of a gangplank leading from the pier to a float.

About thirty persons had reached the float when Policeman Murphy heard the gangplank creak. He shouted a warning, and tried to fight his way to the entrance of the gangplank, but he might as well have tried to battle unaided against a football wedge. Then there was a crackling sound as the gangplank parted in the centre and the persons on it were sent in a mass overboard.

The launch of the Ksarsarge happened to be at the float. Its crew reaching over the side hauled the drenched men and women out of the water almost more quickly than they fell in.

Before those at the shore end of the pier had realized that an accident really had occurred the last bedraggled passenger had been landed. An ambulance responded to a hurry call from Roosevelt Hospital, but the rescue people were ready to start home when it arrived.

BRIDE SEES HUSBAND KILLED.

She Applauds His Play in Football Game—It Ends Fatally.

CHESTER, Penn., Oct. 8.—John S. Summersgill, 21 years old, a member of the Franklin Football Club, died in the Chester Hospital to-day from injuries received while playing in a football game with the Homestead club in this city.

Summersgill was injured early in the game, but refused to stop. After making a run of fifty yards he was tackled, and as he fell an opponent's shoe struck him on the temple. He became unconscious, and died in the hospital ten minutes after being admitted.

On the side lines, applauding the play made by her husband, was Mrs. Summersgill, a bride of three months. When informed that her husband was dead she fainted. Her condition is serious.

ROOSEVELT, WORST RIDER.

President Confesses It in a Talk About the Spanish War.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—District Attorney Tinsey of the Eastern District of Kentucky is here seeking reappointment. He went to the President about it yesterday, and mentioned that he had been a Union soldier in the civil war. The President became interested. Seeing the good effect he had produced, Mr. Tinsey added that his son had been a cavalry Lieutenant in the Spanish war. The President's interest visibly increased.

"You were a cavalryman in the same war," Tinsey reminded him.

"Ye-es, I was a cavalryman," the President admitted. He paused; there seemed to be something on his mind. Suddenly it came out in a burst of confidence.

"But the actual fact about that experience of mine, Mr. Tinsey," he confessed, "is that I was the very worst rider in my regiment."

LET THE WEST WAIT, IS ARMSTRONG'S PLEA

And Not Make Uniform Insurance Laws Impossible.

HE'S ON HIS WAY BACK HERE

To See Hughes About the Mayoralty Nomination—Says Committee Will Do Its Duty.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 8.—Senator Armstrong, Chairman of the Insurance investigating committee, left for New York to-night on insurance matters. This, some believe, indicated that he had been called to New York on account of the Mayoralty situation. On this subject he refused to talk, saying that he would have a personal talk with Charles E. Hughes before expressing an opinion about the effect which Mr. Hughes's acceptance of the nomination for Mayor would have on the insurance investigation. Before leaving Chairman Armstrong issued this statement:

"I regret very much to see other States apply drastic remedies in advance of action in this State. Our committee was appointed to investigate conditions in the insurance business and to propose remedial legislation. I sincerely hope other States will wait until we have had an opportunity to complete our work.

"These insurance companies are perfectly solvent and are able to carry out every contract they have made or may make. There is no reason for refusing to permit them to continue to do business. If Nevada proposes to do one thing, Missouri another thing, and some other State still another thing, there will be a chaotic condition of affairs. I believe there is due at least the courtesy to New York State to wait until the investigation is completed and our remedial legislation is applied.

"Our committee will make the most thorough investigation possible, and when we are through we shall make it our business to adopt such legislation as will safeguard the policy holders and make the insurance business safer and sounder and more attractive than it has ever been before. If other States jump in before we can complete our work or can adopt any legislation everything will be confusion in the insurance business of the country.

"Another point: When a number of Western insurance commissioners were in New York recently, we had a conference with them, and we promised to submit to them for their suggestions, what remedial legislation it was proposed to adopt. In this way we hope to secure uniform action in all the States. It is not right for other States to take action after our committee has been at work only four weeks and long before we have reached the end of our investigation. Any action they might take at this time would be premature.

"Our committee was not appointed to tear down the insurance business of the country, but to build it up. We are simply tearing down some of the rotten timbers to get the right foundation on which to build. We are trying to do this work man-fashion, thoroughly, and conscientiously. It is not a pleasant task at best, but we are not dodging and shall not dodge any responsibility. The insurance body is sound, but it is afflicted with some ulcers. We are performing a surgical operation for the removal of these ulcers from the body, not trying to kill the insurance body. Because we have discovered some rottenness, it is not right for outside States to cripple the insurance business and handicap our efforts."

DOUBTS MISSOURI'S POWER.

Ex-Insurance Commissioner Doesn't Think N. Y. Life Can Be Ousted.

Several insurance lawyers and others familiar with the history of life insurance supervision in this country who were seen by a TIMES reporter yesterday expressed the opinion that Insurance Superintendent Vandiver of Missouri would find himself unable to make good his threat to cancel the license of the New York Life Insurance Company to do business in that State unless President John A. McCall resigned and the funds used for political campaign contributions were replaced.

It was learned also that President McCall in 1898 frankly told a committee composed of the Insurance Commissioners of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Michigan, and Ohio that he had contributed to the Republican campaign fund in 1896. The Commissioner representing Missouri at that time did not find any fault with the action of President McCall.

Most outspoken in his opinion that the Missouri Insurance Commissioner would not be able to carry out his threat was William A. Fricke, Superintendent in this city of the Central Union Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati. For two successive terms Mr. Fricke was Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin. As Chairman of a legislative committee he had revised or formulated most of the existing insurance laws of Wisconsin. He has written a text book on insurance and a small library of smaller works on insurance topics.

"I don't see how the State of Missouri can arbitrarily revoke the license of the New York Life Insurance Company to do business in that State on any such ground as that mentioned in the letter written by Supt. Vandiver to President McCall," said Mr. Fricke. "No Insurance Commissioner has any such right. He can go in and investigate the affairs of a company doing business in his State at any time circumstances seem to justify such procedure. He can examine the Directors of the company and its officials, and the company must defray the expense, but only if such examination should disclose gross mismanagement can he order a reorganization or decide that the company must do no further business in his State.

"It is only when an Insurance Commissioner upon examination finds a company to be insolvent that he can take such arbitrary action as is contemplated in Missouri. There is not a State in the Union where the courts would not restrain the Insurance Commissioner from arbitrarily revoking, or even refusing, a license, except for the cause I have just mentioned. Even in this State, where the Superintendent of Insurance under the statute has such wide and sweeping powers, that he can revoke or refuse a license if in his opinion such action would be to the best interests of the people, his action would be open to review by the courts."

Mr. Fricke said there had been many cases in the past where licenses had been refused to life insurance companies for one reason or another, or where licenses in existence had been revoked. There were many instances, he added, where such action had been taken arbitrarily, but in nearly every case where the company had gone into court the Commissioner had been enjoined from summary action and ordered to give the company a hearing.

"During the four years I was Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin," said Mr. Fricke, "I took summary action to refuse licenses to or revoke licenses of forty-two companies. I have no doubt that any of these companies could have gone into court and had me enjoined had they not feared the publicity this would have involved. When I resigned during my second term I examined my records and found that of the forty-two companies I had proceeded against, thirty-six had failed."

A Case Won in Wisconsin.

Mr. Fricke cited several cases where Insurance Commissioners had been restrained by the courts. About a year ago the Insurance Commissioner of Wisconsin cited the Prudential Life Insurance Company to appear before him and show cause why its license should not be revoked. The company, instead of obeying the summons, went into the Federal courts and won out.

In 1903 the Wisconsin Commissioner charged the Equitable Life Assurance Society with violating the law of the State in regard to the distribution of surplus and threatened to cancel the company's license unless it complied within thirty days with the law as interpreted by the Commissioner. The company went into the courts and had the Commissioner enjoined, on the ground that he was interfering with its business. On appeal to the Supreme Court the injunction restraining the Commissioner was made permanent. The Metropolitan Life's license was arbitrarily revoked in Kansas several years ago, but the company successfully contested the action in court and was reinstated under mandamus.

"Nothing can be gained, anyhow, by such arbitrary acts on the part of Insurance Commissioners," added Mr. Fricke.

Mr. Fricke told how the annual convention of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners action was taken to investigate some of the larger companies by a committee composed of the Commissioners from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Michigan, and New York.

"Mr. McCall at that time told us all about the campaign contributions he had made, adding that he thought it in the interest of the policy holders. Nobody took issue with him. We knew also that Robert H. McCurdy had charge of the foreign business of the Mutual, and that he was getting an extra large commission on it."

WHO SUPT. VANDIVER IS.

An Ardent Bryanite and a Fighter of Missouri Boodlers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—Insurance Superintendent W. D. Vandiver of Missouri, who has just called on John A. McCall for restitution of the funds given by the New York Life Insurance Company for campaign purposes, was a member of Congress prior to Gov. Folk's election. There are two facts about him which throw light on his attitude in this matter. One is that he has always been a vehement supporter of Mr. Bryan; the other is that he violently opposed the boodlers and grafters of St. Louis, and owes his present post to the part he took in Gov. Folk's fight against them.

Vandiver managed Folk's campaign last year and fought the rings to a standstill. In Congress and on the stump Vandiver has always been a Bryanite of the strongest kind, and has never evinced a bit of moderation, political observers say. Taking the two phases of his career together, Missourians here say that the action taken by him yesterday is exactly what was to have been expected of him.

PRUDENTIAL HAD A FIGHT.

Wisconsin Insurance Commissioner Wanted Trust Company's Books.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 8.—The Prudential Insurance Company escaped being barred from Wisconsin by the granting of permission to Insurance Commissioner Host to examine not only its own books, but those of the trust company allied with it.

Two years ago Host made an inspection of the Prudential's books, but at the completion of the task demanded of the Prudential Company that it permit him to also see the books of the trust company with which it chiefly operated.

The Prudential Company declared that it had nothing to do with the trust company except as a stockholder, and that the books of the trust company were not its property. The trust company officials declared that the Insurance Commissioner of no State had any right to see its books, and produced a report of the New Jersey banking authorities that the books were in good condition.

Host, however, informed the Prudential authorities that he would cancel the company's license to operate in Wisconsin unless the desired permission was granted. The Prudential still declined and the license was revoked. An injunction was obtained from Judge Seaman, in the United States Circuit Court, and after several preliminary hearings came up for argument. Before Judge Seaman rendered a decision the Prudential notified Host that the books of the trust company could be inspected, and the injunction proceedings were withdrawn. The license was renewed, but whether or not the inspection has been made is not known.

EQUITABLE SELLS REALTY.

Disposes of a Profitable Lot of Houses in Jersey City.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society, through Simeon Rowland, a real estate agent, has sold twenty-seven houses in Storm and Summit Avenues and Howard Place, Jersey City, to the Landsine Realty Company. The Equitable bought the land from the Storm estate about twenty years ago. Fifteen years ago the houses, which are two-story frame buildings, were erected. They have always been in demand at a fair rental, and were considered a profitable investment.

When asked why the houses were sold Mr. Rowland said they would have been disposed of some time ago if a buyer could have been found. They were put on the market more than a year ago, but the Equitable refused to sell them singly. No one wished to invest so large an amount as was required to buy them all. When the buildings were erected the Equitable valued the entire property at $110,000.

DID NOT SEE MR. HYDE.

Denial by Mr. Untermyer of a Yarn About a Secret Interview in Yonkers.

Samuel Untermyer said last night that there was not a word of truth in a report printed in a newspaper yesterday that he had visited the Frankfort Hotel near Yonkers to have a private conference with James Hazen Hyde. He had not seen Mr. Hyde for a week, and was not aware of the existence of such a hotel. Mr. Hyde was in Boston yesterday.

FEUD DUEL ON HORSEBACK.

One Combatant Mortally Wounded—His Son Also Killed.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 8.—In a duel on horseback to-day in the streets of Ruleville, near here, F. F. Holwell was mortally wounded by Frank Fuller, and died soon after the fight.

An hour later Felix Holwell, 17 years old, a son of the dead duelist, was shot and killed by Biscoe Bennett.

The trouble was due to an old feud. Bennett was arrested. Fuller escaped.

Speaker Nixon Still Improving.

WESTFIELD, N. Y., Oct. 8.—Speaker Nixon passed the day comfortably. Dr. McDonald of Albany will stay here another day.

50,000 CHALLENGES ISSUED BY MORGAN

Police Must Aid the Elections Superintendent This Year.

THAT GIVES HIM 7,000 MEN

And the Little-Discussed Amended Law Will Send Them to Jail If They Don't Help.

Superintendent of Elections George W. Morgan last night caused to be delivered to Police Headquarters 50,000 documents bearing the names of "suspects." These documents will be delivered to the proper election districts this morning when the registration books are opened. The documents are of two kinds—"challenge" and "challenge and arrest." Of the first kind there are 35,000.

The first instructs registry officers to challenge the person named and then swear him if he insists on registering. By the second, the person named must be challenged, and if he swears in his registration, he must then be arrested.

The instructions to the Inspectors on the "challenge and arrest" document follow:

> Investigation under my direction has furnished proof that the names mentioned in the following list and appearing on the registry list of 1904 have become disqualified from being registered for the general election of 1905 from the addresses set opposite such names respectively. Should any person attempt to register upon any of these names from the corresponding address set opposite each of such names, I hereby call upon you, pursuant to the authority conferred upon me by Section 7 of the Metropolitan Elections District law, as amended by Chapter 689 of the Laws of 1905, and fully set forth on pages 208-9 of the official copy of the Election law which has been furnished you, to challenge such person before registering his name and to administer the challenge oath to him as required by subdivision 6 of Section 34 of the Election law. Upon the registration of any such person from the address set opposite such name you are hereby directed to cause his arrest forthwith.

The instructions on the "challenge" document are:

> Investigation made under my direction has raised doubt as to the right of the persons mentioned in the following list and appearing on the registry books of 1904 to register for the general election of 1905 from the addresses set opposite their respective names. Should any such person attempt to register from the address set opposite such name, I hereby call upon you, pursuant to the authority conferred upon me by Section 7 of the Metropolitan Elections District law, as amended by Chapter 689 of the Laws of 1905, and fully set forth on Pages 208-9 of the official copy of the Election law which has been furnished you, to challenge such person before registering his name and to administer the challenge oath to him as required by subdivision 6 of Section 34 of the Election law.

By the document that calls for an arrest the Superintendent sets forth that his office has proof of what is charged.

Supt. Morgan's office was never so well equipped. The police have just come to a realization of the fact that they are obliged by law to swell Supt. Morgan's force this year, giving him 7,000 new deputies. Under the law they must render every assistance when called on. Failure to so do and conviction of such failure now constitutes a felony, and imprisonment and loss of place on the force can be meted out. Conviction means imprisonment, anyway, for not more than three years, for fines for delinquency have been cut out by the amendments by the Legislature of 1905.

The sweeping amendment to the law was drafted by an expert in legislation bearing on political conditions. It was passed at Albany and signed by the Governor without creating much of a stir. The heavy penalties for failure to aid Supt. Morgan or his chief deputies were not discussed much. More trouble ensued over the appropriation bill on behalf of Supt. Morgan's office than anything else in which the Metropolitan Elections District was concerned. And after a severe fight, Senators Raines and Malby got it through, despite the opposition of the Platt Senators.

Section 7 of the Metropolitan Elections District law as now amended reads:

> The State Superintendent or any deputy may call on any person to assist him in the performance of his duty; and he may also call on any public officer who by himself or his assistants, deputies, or subordinates shall render such assistance as may be required. Any such person, public officer, deputy, or subordinate who shall fail, on the demand of the Superintendent or any deputy, to render such aid and assistance in the performance of his duty as he shall demand, or who shall willfully hinder and delay such Superintendent or deputy in the performance of his duty shall be guilty of a felony and shall upon conviction thereof be sentenced to imprisonment in a State prison for a period of not more than three years, and, if a public officer, shall, in addition to such imprisonment, forfeit his office. A member of a uniformed police force and every Sheriff, Deputy Sheriff, and election officer shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed a public officer.

SHOT OVER DEAD MOTHER.

Man Wounds His Sister, Brother, and Brother-in-Law.

HASTINGS, Neb., Oct. 8.—Over the dead body of his mother, John Budenek shot his sister, his brother, and his brother-in-law to-day. Frances Budenek, 22 years old, was shot in the right hand; Jacob Budenek, 52 years old, received a bullet above the right eye, and Peter Smeall was shot through the left leg, through the abdomen, in the left thigh, and through the left shoulder. The latter two are in a dying condition.

The shooting occurred in a death chamber at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Smeall, where Mrs. Budenek died last night, and was the culmination of a family quarrel that had extended over years. Mrs. Budenek was staying at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Smeall, and because of the family trouble her son John was not permitted to see her during her illness.

When John heard of his mother's death last night he determined to view the body. He entered the house and found the family around the coffin.

His sister Frances said something to him in Polish, whereupon he struck her. Then he drew a revolver and began shooting.

NEGROES LYNCH A NEGRO.

Took from White Officers a Man Who Assaulted Negro Girls.

Special to The New York Times.

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., Oct. 8.—Tok. Seabwright, a negro ex-convict, who yesterday assaulted two negro girls, was taken from county officers last night by a large mob of negroes and lynched. After he had been hanged to a tree his body was riddled with bullets.

The first assault greatly enraged the negroes who learned of it, and they joined two white officers who went in search of Seabwright. While searching the party encountered armed negroes seeking Seabwright to get vengeance for the second assault.

When the man was captured the negroes cried for immediate death. The officers tried to protect him, but as they were heavily outnumbered they surrendered and went away at the command of the mob.

Burglars in W. H. Ducker's House.

Special to The New York Times.

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Oct. 8.—W. H. Ducker, a New York merchant, living in Winthrop Street, was at dinner to-night with his family, when he heard footsteps. When he looked out of the window Mr. Ducker saw two men jump down from one of the outhouses and run away. Mrs. Ducker ran upstairs and found that her bedroom had been ransacked and $1,000 worth of jewelry stolen. The burglars got away.

Man Mortally Stabbed on the Bowery.

Thorstean Gladheim of 111 North Sixteenth Street, East Orange, N. J., was fatally stabbed in the heart to-night in the Dry Dock Hotel, Third Street and the Bowery. He is dying in Bellevue Hospital. A penknife was stuck into his heart.

I'D PAY THE PRICE—HANLY.

Indiana Governor Willing to be Defeated for Upholding Law.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—In an address before the Young Men's Christian Association this afternoon Gov. J. Frank Hanly of Indiana said:

"A few months ago it became my duty to assume the office of Governor of Indiana. All over the State I found the laws disregarded; I found liquor sold at illegal hours; I found winerooms open all night, where men, women, and beardless boys congregated; I found gambling machines, poolrooms, and betting on races everywhere. I did not stop to question whether these things are right or wrong. I found that they were against the law. And the best I could, I sought to enforce the law.

"Some of my party associates said to me: 'Governor, you're going to wreck the Republican Party in Indiana.' I answered: 'I don't know. It may be. It may be that political humiliation awaits me if I continue in my course. If so, I am willing to pay the price.'"

Gov. Hanly referred to the widespread corruption in the political and business life of the country.

"The Nation to-day," he said, "is at a low tide in the patriotism of peace. It is treason from which there is danger constant and imminent—the treason of peace. It is found in the halls of Congress and in the judicial chamber—sometimes with the judicial ermine about its shoulders, pretending to administer justice.

"It is greed and avarice and lust of gain that make possible the shameful stories of the New York life insurance companies, which are now in circulation, and that take hold of the hearts of the transportation men until they think that the great corporations are alone to be considered."

WHAT ABOUT JEROME?

That's the Question That Interests Republicans and Democrats.

"What about Jerome?" was the question asked yesterday by politicians; "will he get the Tammany indorsement or will he get the Republican nomination?"

Tammany Hall leaders declared flatly that they were up in the air. It was, they said, "up to" Charles F. Murphy. The Republicans said it was practically "up to" Chairman Halpin and State Chairman Odell—and perhaps Charles E. Hughes—as to whether the District Attorney would be on the Republican ticket. Certainly there wasn't anybody in either party who pretended that he could dispose of the Jerome problem.

The Tammany convention for the nomination of District Attorney, three Supreme Court Justices, Registrar, County Clerk, Sheriff, and four Coroners takes place at 7:30 Thursday evening in Tammany Hall. The Manhattan Borough Convention will be at 9:30 at the same place.

Candidates for the four nominations for Coroners are as plenty as snowflakes in midwinter. Every district has several. Tammany is determined to get rid of the four now holding the places.

DEMOCRATS FIGHT GORMAN.

Form an Anti-Amendment Association in Baltimore.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 8.—The Democratic Anti-Amendment Association has been organized here to aid the Republican Party in the fight against the suffrage amendment. The Anti-Amendment Association proposes to make the fight a straight-out anti-Gorman crusade, treating the amendment as a scheme for the rehabilitation of Gorman's power in Maryland. The Reform League, composed of both Democrats and Republicans, is taking extraordinary precaution to prevent election frauds.

Gov. Warfield and former United States Senator Whyte, who are opposed to the amendment, are being urged to come out openly against it. The Governor refused to sign the bill when passed by the Legislature. Senator Rayner is taking no part in the campaign.

SAY HEARST WILL RUN.

Talk of an Alliance with Odell in an Effort to Beat Tammany.

The only information the Municipal Ownership League gave out yesterday was that its convention would be held on Wednesday, some time and somewhere. It was said that no agreement on these points had been reached.

It was said that the Municipal Ownership leaders were waiting until the last minute to see what Lawyer Hughes would do about the Republican nomination. They want to have the advantage of knowing what the others have done before they act.

There seemed to be almost no doubt on the part of those close to William R. Hearst that he will be the head of the third ticket. The Hearst men do not say that their candidate can win—to beat McClellan and Tammany Hall is the great consideration.

The remark of State Chairman Odell that Arthur Brisbane, Mr. Hearst's representative, called to see him Friday on a "personal matter" has been explained now. It is known that Chairman Woodruff's remarks in his convention speech about the help the Republican ticket would receive was based on Mr. Odell's conversation with Mr. Brisbane.

CO-EDS PRISONERS IN MINE.

Men Demanded Ransom Money and Students Stood a Siege.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Oct. 8.—A geology class from Drake University were held prisoners at the bottom of a coal shaft at Flint Valley Mine yesterday by miners gathered at the top of the shaft, who demanded 25 cents a head ransom. The class, composed mostly of young women, under the leadership of Prof. Nichols, is giving special study to Iowa coal formations.

The miners may have made the demand as a joke, but they became serious when their overtures were met with feminine scorn.

"Pay up or stay down," was the ultimatum hurled down the shaft. Prof. Nichols's counsel to resist met with favor, and the co-eds resigned themselves to await the outcome. The miners at length drew up the car. The university authorities probably will ask the mine owners to investigate.

WOMAN WANDERS AWAY.

Mrs. Pauline King Found by the Police at Sheepshead Bay.

An elderly woman was found by the police of Sheepshead Bay late Saturday night wandering about in Emmons Avenue. She was taken to the Coney Island Police Station, but was unable to give an account of herself. In the Coney Island Court yesterday morning she was committed to the Raymond Street Jail.

Soon after she had been taken to jail a general alarm was sent out from Police Headquarters for Mrs. Pauline King at the request of Dr. C. J. Ferris, who lives at an uptown hotel. Dr. Ferris was told about the Mrs. King in the Raymond Street Jail, and went there and identified her as his mother-in-law. He said she was 55 years of age, and had recently shown signs of mental weakness. It was his intention, he said, to send her to an asylum. He left her in jail over night. She got away from her home some time Saturday.

PLUNKITT NEAR DEATH AFTER AN OPERATION

Deposed Leader Rallies After a Critical Ordeal.

LIKELY NOW TO RECOVER

Weakened by His Recent Defeat He Developed an Abscess and Almost Had Blood Poisoning.

George Washington Plunkitt, who was a Senator and a district leader in Tammany once, but who was defeated for the Senate a year ago and was deposed from the Tammany leadership of his district, the Fifteenth, in the recent primaries, is now fighting for life at his home, 223 West Fifty-first Street.

For almost two hours on Saturday afternoon the ex-Senator was on the operating table, and a physician has been at his bedside almost constantly since. The operation—for retro-peritoneal abscess—was performed by Dr. John A. Wyeth in the nick of time. Senator Plunkitt was on the verge of blood poisoning. Dr. Wyeth was assisted by Dr. C. H. Hunt, Dr. C. Wakestraw, and Dr. Livecomb.

"There is every reason to believe that Senator Plunkitt will recover," said Dr. Wyeth last night. "I left his bedside only a short time ago, and found him resting easy. The operation was successful, and no complications have appeared. Owing to his age and the strain he has been under in recent months, his recovery will be slow."

On Friday Senator Plunkitt was at Tammany Hall for a short time. When he got back home he was so ill that he went to his bed at once. On Saturday Dr. Wyeth was called and advised an operation. The crisis was imminent, and not a moment was wasted. At 3:30 o'clock everything was in readiness. Dr. Livecomb, who is Dr. Wyeth's assistant at the Polyclinic Hospital, administered the anaesthetic. Senator Plunkitt was under the knife until after 5 o'clock, but rallied satisfactorily.

George E. Plunkitt, the ex-Senator's only son, with his wife, were notified in advance of the operation, and have since been with Mrs. Plunkitt at the family home.

"We think my father will get well," said the son last night, "but under the most favorable circumstances, the doctors say, he will be in bed five or six weeks. The complaint for which he was operated on is an old one. He was operated on before by Dr. Wyeth for the same complaint, I think about ten years ago."

One of the gravest factors in Senator Plunkitt's condition is his impaired health, due to the long, hard fight he made against The McManus in the primaries. The campaign was the most picturesque of the year. Its result practically eliminated Plunkitt as a factor in local politics.

For almost forty years he had been the leader in his district, and he regarded victory as certain. Although styled "Tightwad" by his opponents, who spared no gibe to belittle him in the eyes of the voters, he spent real money in making his struggle and working morning, noon, and night. On the morning of Sept. 19, primary day, he issued a pronunciamento.

"When the ballots are in," he said, "and the count is made you will find your humble servant, George Washington Plunkitt, the winner."

Defeat took all the starch out of him. He had not figured on such a contingency. His old friends hardly knew him. What hurt him most, he said, was the ingratitude of those whom he had befriended.

Senator Plunkitt became active in politics in the early sixties. In 1868 he was sent to the Assembly. In 1883 he went to the Senate, serving several terms. He first tasted defeat in 1904, when Martin Saxe beat him for re-election. This blow embittered him, and he charged The McManus with having aided in his downfall. The bad blood engendered then fairly overflowed when McManus wrested the leadership from him.

It has always pleased the ex-Senator to be known as the "Father of the Speedway." He is very proud, also, of the part he took in the establishment of Bronx Park. A few months ago he contributed to the newspapers a notable dissertation on "Honest Graft." He is 63 years old.

KEARSARGE'S DEADLY AIM.

One Gun Crew Scores 30 Hits in 32 Shots from a 12-Incher.

The officers and men of the battleship Kearsarge of the Second Division of the first squadron of the North Atlantic fleet are much elated over a report that has come from Washington concerning the record made by the ship at the recent target practice off Provincetown. All of the ships did remarkably well, it was said, but the firing from the after double turret of the Kearsarge is said to have been almost unprecedented. This turret was in charge of Lieut. Y. S. Williams, and of thirty-two shots the gunners are said to have hit the target no fewer than thirty times.

The twelve-inch guns in the lower and the eight-inch guns in the upper turret were fired simultaneously during this exhibition. The cruiser Galveston, one of the new protected cruisers, also made a fine record, her gunners scoring 81 per cent. with the main battery of five-inch guns.

YOU MUST REGISTER TO VOTE.

To-day and to-morrow will be the first days of registration. The polls will be open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. You can find the list of registration places in The Times to-day.

MAX VERY MUCH ALIVE.

Kelman, the Newsboy Candidate, Kept Busy Denying a Death Notice.

Max Kelman, the ex-newsboy who made money in Bronx real estate, and is now running for Alderman on an independent ticket in the Thirty-fourth Assembly District, was kept busy yesterday sending telegrams and making calls to give his friends convincing proof that he was not dead. This notice, printed yesterday, was the cause of the trouble:

> KELMAN.—Suddenly, at 556 East 139th St., Max, beloved son of Maurice and Sadie Kelman, 22 years of age.
> Funeral at 9:30 A. M., at St. Jerome's Church.

The notice did not say on what date the funeral would take place or where the church was located. St. Jerome's is a Catholic church at 138th Street and Alexander Avenue. Mr. Kelman is a Jew.

When he went for a walk after breakfast yesterday morning, not knowing that he had been cut off in the flower of his youth, a friend rushed up, gave him a thump on the back and said excitedly: "Max! Tell me that you are not dead!"

When the candidate for Aldermanic honors recovered his breath he explained that he was not dead. The friend showed him the death notice.

"Some of my enemies," said Max. "They have been trying to ruin me and show that I was a dead one."

When Kelman returned home he saw telegraph messengers approaching from all directions. They carried messages of condolence to his parents. The sidewalk was crowded with friendly politicians who had come to leave their cards.

Undertakers, florists, and tombstone merchants called at frequent intervals throughout the day and did not exhibit any signs of joy when Max told them that he was alive.

Asked how he felt when he read his death notice Max said it "just made me feel mad."

FUSION IN THE BRONX.

Slate for the Borough May Be Made Up To-day.

Some sort of Fusion prevails in the Bronx, and a committee of seven, representing the Republicans, the Municipal Ownership men, the Citizens' Union, the Business Committee of One Hundred, and other organizations have been conferring for a week to make up a ticket with which to oppose Tammany Hall as represented by Louis F. Haffen and his choices for Coroners.

Ex-Assemblyman W. W. Niles, Coroner William O'Gorman, Jr., and ex-Park Commissioner John E. Eustis have been most considered. There has not been so much work with regard to the two nominations for Coroner.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the conferrees will meet at the Union Republican Club, 164th Street and Boston Road, and it is expected that a slate will be made.

LABOR UNIONS FIGHT WEAVER.

Philadelphia Organization Decides to Support the Regular Ticket.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 8.—The Central Labor Union, with its 124 affiliated labor organizations represented to-day, withdrew Frank Feeney, its candidate for Sheriff; indorsed the candidates on the Republican ticket; passed a vote of thanks to Senator Penrose for his efforts in behalf of union labor, and started a campaign against the City Party nominees.

T. J. McCaffery, a member of the Committee of Seventy, was present as a delegate, but, although he fought for the City Party, he was able to rally only four delegates to his support. Everything said in favor of the party was hissed. The score of speakers who praised the Republican Party were interrupted by applause and their suggestions were adopted by acclamation.

The arguments used in favor of the Republican Party were that "in all organized trades only union men are employed on the filtration plants"; "the Republican Party has given us the eight-hour day and union wages on all municipal work"; "Senator Penrose supported our eight-hour day bill in Congress"; "the Republican leaders have recognized organized labor by appointing a union textile worker to be a factory inspector," and "if we stand by the party the party will stand by us."

CHURCH WARDEN EXPLAINS.

The Rev. Mr. Russell Was Friendly to the Rev. Mr. Hathaway.

Frank F. Wood, Senior Warden of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church in East New York, explained last night that members of the congregation who had resented a supposed snub to the Rev. Harry St. Clair Hathaway had acted under a misapprehension. He admitted that the Rev. James Townsend Russell had given notice of Mr. Hathaway's retirement coincident with his own and that members of the church thereupon had circulated a petition in Mr. Hathaway's behalf.

"The real situation, however," said Mr. Wood, "is this. Last Sunday morning the rector, Mr. Russell, announced to the congregation that he had resigned in order to accept the appointment of Archdeacon of the diocese. Immediately the members thought of Mr. Hathaway as his successor, and when the Junior Warden and myself waited upon Bishop Burgess to inform him of Mr. Russell's resignation we incidentally mentioned Mr. Hathaway as a suitable successor to Mr. Russell. The Bishop told us that he favored the calling of Mr. Hathaway by the congregation.

"Last Thursday night a caucus was held at my home, 336 Stuyvesant Avenue, and it was decided to recommend to the vestry that Mr. Hathaway be called to the rectorship. The following night the regular meeting of the vestry took place.

"Mr. Russell was present, and in the course of the evening made a speech in which he suggested the calling of Mr. Hathaway, and in which he spoke of him in the highest terms. Not only did he do this, but he made a substantial money gift to the church to enable it to pay Mr. Hathaway a suitable salary, and for the further purpose of securing a curate to assist him. The vestry then unanimously decided to call Mr. Hathaway. Mr. Hathaway has been notified, and now has his acceptance of the offer under advisement.

"Mr. Russell and I," said Mr. Hathaway last night, "are the best of friends. The facts are that Mr. Russell himself nominated me as his successor. I have not yet made up my mind to accept the rectorship."

Gen. William T. Clark's Condition.

At St. Luke's Hospital it was said last night that the condition of Gen. William Thomas Clark, who is very ill there, was unchanged. It was said that he was in no immediate danger. Gen. Clark is the only surviving Adjutant General and Chief of Staff of Gen. Grant's Army. He was operated upon for cancer.

GOVERNMENT TO BUY FORT HAMILTON LAND

Secretary Taft Plans to Enlarge the Reservation.

SITE FOR A WAR CAMP

Ground in Rear of Batteries Needed in Case of Mobilization—More 16-inch Guns.

Secretary of War Taft, who is in New York to meet Mrs. Taft, who is expected to arrive from Europe to-day on the Red Star liner Kroonland, said last night that the next Congress would in all probability be asked to condemn forty-five acres of land near Fort Hamilton. The land is wanted for the improvement of the reservation, with the special object in view of accommodating additional troops in time of war.

The land which the Government hopes to acquire is behind the batteries. As Secretary Taft pointed out, in case of war additional troops would necessarily be sent to reinforce the regular garrison at Fort Hamilton. This new space, he said, was to be used as a camp ground for the accommodation of these troops.

The Secretary said that on his visit to the Sandy Hook proving grounds on Saturday he had been much impressed with the big sixteen-inch gun, which is to be mounted in the Sandy Hook fortications.

"We are now waiting," said Secretary Taft last night, "for the construction of a suitable carriage for this gun, and we will then be able to test it at various elevations. So far the gun has been fired ten times, with very satisfactory results. This gun fires a 2,400-pound projectile, and is a very formidable weapon."

The Secretary said it was not true that the Government intended to abandon the construction of more ordnance of that type.

He was asked as to the present status of the work on the Panama Canal, the construction of which, it was decided a few days ago, should remain under the supervision of the War Department.

"Since my return from the Philippines," said the Secretary, "I have had very little opportunity to look into the work. Mr. Shonts and the engineers are now on the Isthmus, and exactly what has been accomplished I will not know definitely until I get Mr. Shonts's report. Concerning the yellow fever situation in Panama, I understand that there have been no cases for a month. Between Gov. Magoon, who is practical, and Dr. Gorgas, the medical officer in charge, who is scientific, this yellow fever problem appears to have been very successfully handled.

"In Panama," added the Secretary, "a native very seldom has yellow fever. A year's residence makes one immune. It is only the new-comer who is attacked. However, we have sent a lot of new-comers down there, and that so few of them have had fever is very gratifying."

"How about the President's trip to New Orleans; do you think he will endanger himself by going there before the fever is stamped out?" Secretary Taft was asked.

"It is very certain," he replied, "that any doubt as to the safety of the trip will not deter the President. He will enjoy his visit there, too, for I know of no place where the people are more hospitable than in New Orleans. In New Orleans everybody, individually and collectively, does everything possible to make visitors as comfortable and happy as possible."

If the Kroonland arrives in New York before noon, Secretary Taft probably will leave for Washington on an early afternoon train.

NASSAU SWARMS WITH AUTOS.

And a Great Dust They Kick Up on the Unoiled Roads.

MINEOLA, Oct. 8.—Never before did Nassau County see so many automobiles as to-day. The top notch before was almost a year ago, when the first Vanderbilt Cup race took place. To-day not only the cup courses but all the county roads swarmed with the machines. Their presence caused a growl from those who live alongside the roads that have not been oiled. Along both the old and the new course there was no complaint and no trouble from dust, except where the roads are wider than usual and there were unoiled streaks on either side. The long dry spell caused the unoiled roads to be several inches deep in dust, and the whirling machines made it impossible to have a window open in a house that was within a hundred feet of the lee side of a road.

The racing machines were out in the early morning. It was reported on good authority that one of the machines made the 28.3 miles in 21 minutes.

H. A. Wallbridge of 7 Wall Street was stopped by deputies near Clarence Mackay's place. He disputed the speed charged by the officers, and gave bail before Justice Remsen to appear for trial on Saturday next. Allo Zalnelle of 121 West Thirty-first Street was also stopped and required to give bail.

AUTO HITS A TROLLEY CAR.

Canadian Senator is Hurt and His Chauffeur May Die.

NEWTON, Mass., Oct. 8.—In a collision between an automobile and an electric car here to-day Senator George F. Fulford, a manufacturer, of Brockville, Ontario, was seriously injured. His chauffeur, Louis E. Verrat of Albany, N. Y., had his skull broken and is expected to die. William T. Hanson of Schenectady, N. Y., was also injured.

The automobile, a large gasoline touring car, was going down a hill in Beacon Street just as a Walnut Street car on the Boston and Newton Street Railway tracks was crossing it. The car was going at a fair speed, while the automobile was making about fifteen miles an hour.

The machine struck the car in the side. The collision overturned and destroyed the automobile and smashed in the side of the electric car. All the occupants of the automobile were thrown out, the chauffeur striking on his head. None of the passengers on the electric car was hurt.

Catholics Celebrate Discovery Day.

The fourth anniversary of Columbus's discovery of America was celebrated by the Knights of Columbus in Carnegie Hall last night. John T. O'Brien, President of the New York Chapter, presided. Father Henry Van Rensselaer of St. Francis Xavier Church made an address, in which he said that the Catholics would not bow down to the public schools. "We are not willing to give our children a maimed education," he said. "We train them morally as well as mentally and physically."

WOMEN FIGHT IN THE STREET.

A Brawl in Front of a Theatre with a Thousand Cheering.

Two richly gowned women fought each other in front of a theatre in East Eighty-sixth Street last night. The crowd of more than a thousand persons crowded around the combatants, forming a ring, and, instead of trying to separate them, urged them on. The battle was going on merrily, with men and boys cheering, when two detectives of the East Eighty-sixth Street Station came along and arrested the women.

They said they were Hilda Jagy, a trained nurse, of 202 East Eighty-first Street, and Katherine Elbe, an actress, of 165 East Eighty-sixth Street. The Elbe woman said she was a member of a stock company in Milwaukee and had just come here on a visit. They refused to say what started the fight.

The audience in the Yorville Theatre was just leaving after the concert last night when two young women met outside the lobby. One of them screamed, "He's mine and you won't take him from me." Neither seemed to have an escort. Two young men acted as seconds.

"Go it there," the crowd yelled, as the women hit each other. "Hey, there, no hittin' in the clinches. Git wise to the Marquis of Queensberry rules."

BOY CAVE DWELLER.

Harlem Lad Stays in a Hole Nearly a Week to Avoid a Whipping.

Because he was afraid of getting a whipping for being late at school, Leopold Weiss, 11 years old, ran away from his home at 223 West 121st Street, last Tuesday, and has since been living in a hole in the ground at the rear of a warehouse at 124th Street and Morningside Avenue. Several women in the neighborhood saw the boy climbing over the fence at night and told Sergt. Fitzgerald at the West 125th Street Station. When Policeman Melzter went out to investigate last night he found nothing but an old mattress in the hole and some empty bean cans.

About 1 o'clock this morning the boy was seen to climb over the fence, and by the time Metzler got to the place the lad was fast asleep with a few rags thrown over him. The policeman roused him up and took him to the West 125th Street Station, where he was charged with vagrancy and turned over to the Gerry society. Young Weiss said that the boys on his block had supplied him with food. His mother is in Vienna, and his father died eight months ago. The boy was living in West 121st Street with a relative named Mrs. Werner.

ETON GRADUATE STARVING.

Snatches a Purse in St. Louis—Police Make Up a Fund for Him.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 8.—Worn out with tramping the streets in search of work and exhausted from hunger and sleeplessness, Oliver Hamilton, a young Englishman, who says he was educated at Eton, is the son of a well-known Anglican clergyman, and is himself a master of seven languages and a professor of mathematics, snatched a purse from a woman on Locust Street last night and was captured after a short chase.

Hamilton spent the night and part of to-day in jail, but was released when the police learned that the woman refused to prosecute. Hamilton's wife, formerly a nurse in a Detroit hospital, was found at the address he gave, so weak from hunger that she could scarcely walk. She verified her husband's statements.

Chief of Detectives Keeley was moved by her story and gave her money to buy food. Capt. Reynolds handed to Hamilton a little purse made up by policemen when he released him, with the injunction to go and sin no more.

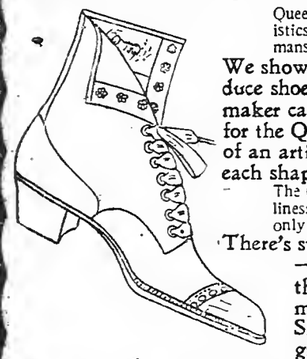
Queen quality shoes.

America's foremost footwear for women.

QUEENLY in quality, queenly in style and a mere peasant in price. Years ago the house of Thomas G. Plant & Co. took the stand that $3.00 or $3.50 was enough to pay for a pair of shoes; that the price would buy all the essential attributes to high class footwear. The world wide reputation the Queen Quality Shoes for women have achieved proves that the manufacturers were right.



Queen Quality Shoes possess all the characteristics of the finest bench-made shoes—workmanship, material and foot-fitting qualities.

We show some forty individual styles, which reduce shoe fitting to a science—a fit that a shoemaker cannot excel. The making of the lasts for the Queen Quality Shoe is under the direction of an artist, who creates an individual style for each shaped foot.

The Queen Quality Shoes give a piquant shapeliness to the foot—a stylish contour that only a high-priced bench shoe can give.

There's stability and lasting worth in every pair—honest and painstaking workmanship, that gives each pair a sterling worth; that makes every wearer of Queen Quality Shoes a permanent advocate of the high grade shoes at these low prices.

M'ADOO TALK ON VIRTUE STIRS Y. M. C. A. MEN

SHAW A NEW OSCAR WILDE

If You'd Break the Law, I'll Recommend Magistrates to Aid You, Police Commissioner Says.

Police Commissioner McAdoo had a heart-to-heart talk yesterday afternoon with an audience of young men in the auditorium of the West Side Y. M. C. A. in Fifty-seventh Street, near Eighth Avenue. He denounced the plays of George Bernard Shaw, lauded President Roosevelt, and found serious fault with the churches, sensational newspapers, and the kind of play that makes a joke of matrimonial relations.

Mr. McAdoo's remarks met with the approval of the young men, who frequently applauded and even followed the Police Commissioner to his automobile to cheer him as he left the building. He said in part;

"When you go to Coney Island in the Summer you may see a black-faced fellow with his head stuck out from a white curtain. The cry is that if you 'hit the nigger in the face you get a cigar.' It is the same with the Police Commissioner. Hit him and you are happy. If the weather is had it is my fault. The responsibility for every evil thing rests with Mulberry Street.

"As the old-time copy books in the schoolroom say, 'Be virtuous and you will be happy,' yet I know a large number of virtuous people in New York who are very unhappy. If you are honest, some of the philanthropic financiers tell you that you will succeed. I know a great many aggressively honest people who are unhappy. If you are industrious, success will be yours, you are told; yet I know many industrious people who are not.

"The key to the riddle is in what you yourself believe to be real happiness. There is the scientist, living in the simplest manner, with only just what he needs for his bodily support, who is completely happy in studying the flowers and the birds, and who is more concerned in the injury to one of his beloved in nature than in the failure of a bank. The insurance troubles are small to him.

"There are industrious people who work as many as eighteen hours a day, and they are not happy in the treadwheel that leads them nowhere. They lack practicability in their labor. The most industrious people I know are in the poolrooms. They work all day in the Tenderloin and all night, and they themselves know that they are not happy.

"Of course, honesty is the best policy, yet there are hundreds of honest people who are most unhappy and unfortunate. Honesty is a negative quality.

"New York City is a strange community of many peoples gathered from many nations. It is a dangerous place for a young man without a well-pointing compass. The average intelligence is high. This is true of the criminal and the decent citizen. If there is anything that is wrong with our young men it is in their hearts and not their heads.

"One of the best things in the Young Men's Christian Association is that it gives you young men a chance to train your muscles. A sound body most always means a clear head. Shakespeare could have written no great play with a cold in the head. You must be physically and morally fit. Train your morals as well as your muscles. This training must be systematic. You can't violate all moral laws through the week and feel that you are cleansed by going to church on Sunday. You must be morally and physically clean and strong. You must exercise every day. I could never have held my police job without training like a prizefighter.

"You can no more violate the moral and physical laws than you can change the date of a note to come due at a certain time. You can occasionally violate the Penal Code, with 10,000 lawyers to aid you and a few Magistrates I could recommend to you.

"Place your standard of happiness high, but not on the pile of dollars you may accumulate. Take pleasure in your splendid city. Find, as I do, the squirrels in the parks more amusing and lovable than politicians. Believe that you can learn more from the ducks than from some preachers and newspaper writers. Lead the healthy life founded on faith.

"The three great forces in New York to-day are the Church, the press, and the theatre. I could not truly say that the press as a whole is bad; that the churches or theatres are evil. We do not find that the attendance of the young men in the churches is what it ought to be, and do believe that the churches should appeal to them in a way that they would attend.

"The churches talk to the young men once a week, and the press every one of the seven mornings and afternoons with extras in all the colors of the rainbow.

"The influence of the press is tremendous. We know the world as we read it. Our own world is small. We cannot see everything. I do not believe that one honest newspaper man will fail to admit that this mighty power is not what it once was. What has robbed it of its influence? Grave exaggeration and falsehood. People read what they know of their own knowledge is not true, and the word goes about that you cannot believe what you see in the newspapers. A great army of people, witnesses to events, know that, with the exception of a few papers, the accounts have been untrue, and they do not believe the press, so that the chance of the election of a man supported by a unanimous press is no better than his adversary's. There is nothing more lamentable than this decline in the power of the press.

"I know a great many reporters in my official capacity, and have found them gentlemen, whose word was good, whose honor was unimpeached, and I believe the day will come when such men will refuse to speak to the liars they know to be among them. I believe that the regeneration of the press is at hand through the influence of the better papers and the public who will not patronize the base ones.

"People have been mobbed in this city by hoodlums, under the pretense that they were a mysterious reporter who would acknowledge his identity when caught and give the finder a reward. That is all wrong, and I am man enough to say so. Real reporters don't do that sort of business. They would rather sweep the streets if there was nothing else that they could do.

"Then there are the theatres, and I am not saying that the most of them are bad. Some of them are very good. The theatre crowds, with two matinées a week, six night performances, and Sunday concerts to attend, represent a vast part of our population, more than those who go to church. They are eager for amusement. The best drawing plays are those where there is a laugh. Unfortunately that is where there are jokes at the expense of the matrimonial relations. They are written by clever men, and intelligent men and women go to see them. They would not let their sons and daughters go, but they do go after hearing the parental discourse, or knowing that their parents did attend. We cannot have a censorship, but we can withhold a license.

"If as fine a man as our President is right about the sacredness of the American home as the pillar of the State, what shall we think of the theatre where it is preached that marriage is a joke? That is not the healthy view of life of our best Americans.

"Now, I do not like to attack Bernard Shaw. He is clever, able, and witty, and he wants us to believe him sincere. If New York should adopt his moral code I would resign my Police Commissionership in an hour. Shaw is a countryman of mine, and, like me, was born poor. He is almost a genius, who classes Shakespeare as a second-rater in the literary world. Shaw may have seen that the way to make money was to do something out of the common. In the drama he represents the new type of Oscar Wilde, whose plays can be revived here with profit, notwithstanding the horrors of his private life.

"I prefer for one the old melodrama, where the hero was always a man, and a gentleman at that; the villain all that should be hissed, and everything came out right in the end. I want the old days, with the good plays, and there were many of them. I do not want the plays where you are made to laugh that marriage is a joke. Public opinion will regulate this in the end, as it will the sensational press.

"Sometimes I make blunders, but they are honest mistakes that I am ready to acknowledge, but I don't like it, when I am doing my best and catch fifty prisoners in a poolroom in West Thirtieth Street, that there should be those who say—and some of my friends have said it—that I have infringed on the privacy of the individual citizen. They would like me first to read the Constitution and then take the accused to the station house in carriages—the accused whose privacy has been invaded behind heavy armored doors, where there are revolvers to shoot you in the back for stopping a wicked business. As long as I am Police Commissioner these people shall have their legal rights, and nothing more. There are now 200 suits against me for infringing on the rights of these delicately sensitive poolroom men."

BIG LIFT BRIDGE OPEN SOON.

$1,000,000 Span Over Newtown Creek Will Be Used Saturday.

What is said to be the first bridge of the lift type ever built by the City of New York, and the biggest of its sort in the country, is to be opened for public use on Saturday. The bridge spans Newtown Creek, between Vernon Avenue, Long Island City, and Manhattan Avenue, Greenpoint. The work on it began three years ago, and was to have been ready on Jan. 1, 1904. The delay was largely due to the failure of the city to bring condemnation proceedings to get land for the steel viaduct approaches.

The bridge is elevated to cross the Long Island Railroad tracks in Long Island City. Between the floor of the bridge and the water at high tide is a distance of twenty-four feet, and the engineers figure that at least half of the craft that pass up and down the creek can go under the bridge without the necessity of lifting the two leaves.

The old wooden drawbridge had a central pier, which took up valuable space. Within five years the type of craft plying up and down the creek has changed; where formerly boats of 200 tons were a novelty, now the average tonnage is 800. The two leaves of the lift bridge give a clear channel 150 feet wide. While the bridge was being built engineers from all over the country inspected the work.

The big leaves are the feature of the bridge. They are operated by electricity, and work as easily as if they weighed only a ton each, while they weigh more than 1,000. The leaves work on big rockers much like those on a rocking chair in shape, and are counterbalanced by weights of 1,250,000 pounds each. The arms can be raised in thirty seconds by the pressing of a lever, which sets the machinery in motion. The old bridge was opened on an average of 266 times a day, and the average number of pedestrians crossing it in a day was 18,633.

The bridge, including the viaducts, is 1,630 feet long. The Greenpoint approach is only 354 feet long, while that in Long Island City is 1,033 feet long. The bridge proper is 332 feet long. The viaduct approaches consist of steel and masonry, and the roadways are paved with granite blocks on the slopes and asphalt blocks on the level parts. The sidewalks for pedestrians are each 8 feet wide and the roadway is 34 feet wide. The city has laid a double set of trolley tracks over the bridge.

The total cost of the bridge, including the land necessary on each side of the creek, was $1,000,000. The contract price for the bridge work was $547,046. It is expected that the opening of the bridge will be marked by ceremonies in Long Island City and Greenpoint.

DOG TESTIFIES IN COURT.

Toby's Actions Convince the Magistrate of His Ownership.

"I may not know much about law, but I do know something about dogs," said Magistrate Wahle in Morrisania Court yesterday morning, when Louis Jacobi was arraigned before him on a summons obtained by Mrs. Alfred Ellinger of 815 Union Avenue. Mrs. Ellinger charged Jacobi with having her Great Dane dog Toby in his possession. The dog was in court, and Jacobi said he had bought the animal from a peddler.

"Call the dog by his name," said the Magistrate to Mrs. Ellinger.

"Come here, Toby," said the woman.

The dog leaped toward her, licked her hands, and in other ways manifested his delight at seeing his mistress once more. This evidence was so conclusive that the Magistrate told Mrs. Ellinger to take the dog home with her.

Attorney Kelly objected to this, but the Magistrate said:

"That's all right. Mrs. Ellinger may take her dog on promise to bring him into this court to-morrow. If I allowed your client to take him the animal might get lost. You be sure to have your peddler in court, and if there is any evidence that this dog was stolen, I will make it unpleasant for the thief."

Mrs. Ellinger led Toby away in triumph.

EXPRESS MESSENGER ARMED.

Should Have Had a Permit, Court Says, and Holds Him for Trial.

On the charge of carrying a concealed weapon, Arthur C. Hoyt of Pleasantville, N. Y., a messenger of the American Express Company, was held by Magistrate Baker, in the West Side Court yesterday, for Special Sessions.

Mounted Policeman Quinn of the Traffic Squad said that Hoyt refused to obey his orders at Fifty-eighth Street and Eighth Avenue and was arrested. When searched, the policeman said he found a loaded revolver in the messenger's pocket.

Counsel for the prisoner said that Hoyt had the right to carry a revolver to protect the express company's money. The lawyer said it was not necessary for a messenger to have a permit.

"The messenger should have a permit, like any one else," said Magistrate Baker. "He has no right to carry a revolver."

Real Estate Man Goes Free.

William I. Roe, the real estate dealer who was arrested Saturday night charged with stealing $142 from the room of John Glotes of 282 Eighth Avenue, one of his tenants, was discharged in the West Side Court yesterday morning. Mr. Roe proved to Magistrate Baker's satisfaction that he was not near Glotes's room when the money was said to have been stolen.

GREET RUSSIAN ARCHBISHOP.

His First Service Since Moving His Headquarters Here.

Archbishop Tikhon of the Russian Church in the United States and Canada, who recently transferred his headquarters from San Francisco to the St. Nicholas Russian Church, in East Ninety-seventh Street, preached there yesterday morning.

The church gets the title of cathedral through the change in the Archbishop's headquarters.

"I am glad to be with you in the East," he said, "it is more becoming, more fitting that the headquarters of the diocese should be nearer to Russia."

The service began with the hearing of confessions by the Archbishop and his assistants, followed by the administering of communion. The congregation filed past the Archbishop, received his blessing, kissed his crucifix, and proceeded across the hall to where two of the assistants stood, one holding a Russian Bible and the other a basket filled with small slices of bread. One by one the congregation kissed the Bible and took a slice of bread in commemoration of the feeding of the multitudes.

After the last person had filed past, the Archbishop retired to the altar, where he was dressed in purple by the priests, who put upon his head the high square black hat of the Greek prelate. Then, with a curiously carved staff in his hand, the Archbishop led the way, followed by the priests, to the parlors of the cathedral adjoining.

Behind the priests about fifty of the members of the congregation followed the Archbishop into the parlors, where they were entertained at tea. Among those present were Nicholas Lodygensky, the Russian Consul General at New York, and the Countess Nephtal.

The Cowperthwait Sanitary Bedding

The Cowperthwait Sanitary Bedding is not only hygienically pure, but it is made in a way that insures proper rest. If you do not obtain refreshing sleep the trouble may be that the mattress is not suited to your weight—that it is too tightly stuffed to yield to "a light weight," or too thin to keep "a heavy weight" off the springs.

Cowperthwait & Sons make all the mattresses they sell, and can make one exactly to suit your weight.

Solid Mahogany of Rich Color

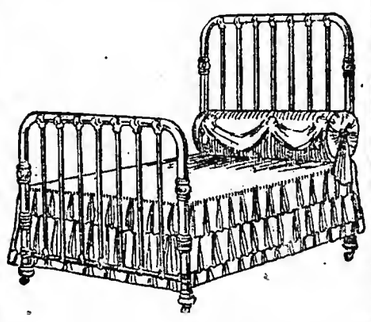
Color and marking in mahogany give the wood its value.

This chair, eminently suitable for the centre of the parlor, is superbly carved and highly polished.

Covered in old fashioned brocatelle of an exquisite shade, or, if preferred, it will be supplied with a cover to match any particular piece or suite of furniture with which you may desire it placed.

It is a chair suggesting that atmosphere of refinement and perfect taste that pervaded the interior of old Southern mansions. The price is unusually low, $29.00.

Beautiful White Iron, $14.25



A bed of exceptional strength, solidly constructed, braced at all the angles and castered.

The two inch continuous posts and the seven large upright rods in the head and foot pieces, with ornamented chills at either end, impart to the bed an appearance of massiveness that the housewife likes to see.

MADE TO RUN GANTLET OF MOSCOW COSSACKS

Ricters Beaten to Death with Knouts and Rifles.

MANY ARE SLAIN AT TIFLIS

Troops Fire After Bombs Are Thrown at Them—St. Petersburg Workmen Well Armed.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 9.—Dispatches to the London newspapers describe the desperate state of affairs at Moscow on Saturday and yesterday.

Many persons were killed or wounded in the rioting. The troops used sabres and rifles, firing point blank into the rioters.

The authorities have issued a proclamation giving the police absolute power to prevent assemblages.

The correspondent of The Standard describes how many of those arrested were made to run the gantlet of a double line of Cossacks in a long, narrow courtyard, the soldiers brutally striking them with knouts and the butts of rifles until they dropped fainting or dead at the end of the line.

TIFLIS, Oct. 8.—Several bombs were thrown at the Cossacks this evening.

The troops fired and a general panic ensued.

Many persons were killed or wounded.

Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 8.—Startling news of rioting and bloodshed at Moscow causes great uneasiness here. It is feared that the unrest will spread to St. Petersburg and that we may witness a repetition of the events of a year ago.

Several hundred Moscow students arrived this morning, ostensibly to take part in the funeral of Gen. Kondratenko, which gave rise to a great popular demonstration at the railway station, whence the body was conveyed to an adjoining monastery for interment; but the students doubtless have other objects, namely, to promote disturbances.

The closing of Moscow University will probably be followed by similar action at St. Petersburg. Then the whole mass of students will attempt to hold meetings wherever the police find it difficult to prevent them, notably at theatres and railway stations.

Labor complications may be expected to follow in the wake of the political propaganda, and the approach of Winter, with its train of misery for the poor of St. Petersburg, will predispose large numbers of the inhabitants to take a share in the disorders.

I am informed that the St. Petersburg workmen are well provided with arms and bombs. Large stores were discovered by the police lately. The Government has need of the greatest moderation and coolness if further bloodshed is to be avoided.

MOSCOW, Oct. 8.—In an affray to-day between crowds of striking bakers and the troops, the mob stoned the police and the troops. The latter fired and dispersed the demonstrators.

Two hundred arrests were made.

TYPHOON KILLED 10,000.

Inhabitants of Islands Near Shanghai Were Swept Away.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 8.—The steamer Tartar, which arrived last night from the Orient, brought news from Shanghai that the loss of life among the natives of the Islands at the mouth of the Yang-Tse River as a result of the typhoon at the beginning of September was tremendous. The North China Daily News of Shanghai said:

"To the east of Tamagming two islands, one called Yawoshwa, the other Shihiousha, distant about twenty miles from Woo-Sung, have suffered much from the typhoon, nearly all the inhabitants having been swept away. The islands have only been inhabited for a short time, comparatively speaking, as they are of recent formation and are not much above high-water mark.

"It is reported that nearly 10,000 people have been drowned on these two islands and the smaller islands adjacent. Tamagming itself has not suffered much, being well above the high water mark."

The Shanghai papers say that the damage to the Canadian Pacific Railway liner Empress of Japan by the typhoon will necessitate the expenditure of $100,000 for repairs. While the storm was raging the steamer Pechili, formerly the Rio de Grande du Sol, foundered near the mouth of the Yang-Tse. Her crew of fifty-four were saved by the German steamer Albenga.

NEW BRITISH DEFENSE PLAN.

A National Army of 250,000 Men Is Proposed.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 9.—The Daily Chronicle announces this morning that H. O. Arnold-Forster, Secretary of State for War, is working out with the Army Council a new scheme to organize a "National Army" of 250,000 men, to be composed mainly of militia and supplemented by regulars and volunteers available for foreign service.

The project, the paper says, includes the building of barracks throughout the country for the new force. It is proposed to intrust home defenses to the Yeomanry and Volunteers, and the defense of the coasts to the Royal Garrison Artillery.

MERE BOY CAUSED WRECK.

Elevated Rules Broken — They Are Every Day, the Coroner Says.

Violation of rules by a mere boy who says he was never instructed how to handle a train caused the rear-end collision on the Third Avenue elevated road at 185th Street Saturday night which resulted in the death of the motorman and endangered others.

This fact was brought out by Coroner Berry in a preliminary examination of Adam Besler, 21 years old, the guard of the first train, who was arrested and held in $10,000 bail on a charge of homicide.

Besler, who looks very young, told the Coroner that he had been in the employ of the Interborough Company about four weeks, and, although he had done duty as a guard for about twenty days, he had never received any instruction and did not know what to do in case of accident.

He also said that he and the motorman, Jennings, were the only men on the train at the time of the accident, and that when the crash came he was in the first car instead of being in the last and signaling the train behind him. He could not swear that the signal lamps on the rear of his train were lighted.

Coroner Berry said last evening that in the company's book of rules there was one which required the full crew to take a train to the yards and another which says that when a train is held up by a signal the conductor of the train shall go to the platform of the last car and signal any approaching train on the same track. Both these rules were violated in the present case. The Coroner says he expects to prove at the inquest to be held next Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock that they are disregarded every day.

Last evening Besler was released on bail. Two of the Interborough men who took the bondsman to the Coroner's office positively refused to discuss the alleged violation of rules.

GREAT RUSSIAN ARMY TO STAY IN FAR EAST

300,000 Men, It Is Said, Will Be Kept There.

THE AUTHORITIES FEAR THEM

Believe They Would Join Malcontents If They Went Home—Russia Also Wants to Frighten China.

TOKIO, Oct. 8.—It is reported here that Russia will station 300,000 troops on the Chinese frontier after peace has been concluded, partly because she is apprehensive of their joining the malcontents at home and partly to intimidate the Chinese.

It is expected that the railway obtained by the Japanese from Kwang-cheng-Tse southward, although it will require an initial investment of about $12,500,000, will ultimately be a paying property, chiefly because of the revenues derived from the Yen-Tai and Fu-Shun collieries.

The foregoing telegram from Tokio bears out hints contained in various dispatches from St. Petersburg and elsewhere, although outside of Russia the idea seemed incredible that a great army would be retained in the Far East because the Russian authorities were afraid of what the troops would do were they to return home.

When the question of peace or war was in the balance it was freely asserted that Russia did not want peace because she did not want the army back—that she would sooner sacrifice the army than have it return. When, to the astonishment of the Russian authorities, the Japanese accepted their "ultimatum," it was asserted that the bureaucracy was disgusted at the result because it did not know what to do with the troops.

The news that the Russian prisoners in Japan are not going straight home, but are to be redrafted to their original regiments, also supports the belief that Russia is afraid of its own army. These men have been educated by the Japanese, and would therefore be regarded as more dangerous than the uneducated mujiks who form the greater part of the Czar's forces.

Russia is supposed to have about 450,000 men in the Far East.

RUSSIANS HONOR DEAD HERO.

Great Demonstration at Burial of Kondratenko in St. Petersburg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 8.—The arrival of the body of Major Gen. Kondratenko, commander of the Seventh East Siberian Rifles, who was killed last December at Port Arthur, and its interment in the venerable Alexander Nevsky Monastery to-day were marked by the most impressive military and civil spectacle witnessed here since the early days of the war.

Thousands of spectators, standing silent and bareheaded in a drizzling rain, walled the broad Nevsky Prospect from the Moscow station to the gates of the monastery, while Grand Dukes, Ministers of State, courtiers, and the highest officers of the army and navy, many of whom had won distinction at Port Arthur and in Manchuria, followed the coffin on foot through the muddy streets as common mourners with the widow and son of the dead General.

Metropolitan Antonius eulogized Gen. Kondratenko as "the soul of the siege," for, said the Metropolitan, "when he died the fortress fell."

HELSINGFORS, Oct. 8.—At a conference of Finnish officials with the Emperor at Peterhof yesterday an important modification of the imperial manifesto of June 26 was adopted, permitting the employment of Finnish and Swedish in the higher administrative departments in Finland instead of the exclusive use of the Russian language.

The Emperor declines to entertain the request made by the Finnish Senate for the holding of an extraordinary session of the Landtag this year.

A MUTINY ON THE MIKASA.

Story Current in Tokio Regarding the Sinking of the Ship.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 8.—The steamer Tartar, which arrived yesterday, brought from Japan a story current in Tokio that the accident to the battleship Mikasa at Ssebo was a result of a mutiny on board because of the resentment by the crew toward the peace terms.

Robert M. Collins, who represented The Associated Press with Gen. Kuroki's army throughout the campaign, and who was a passenger on the Tartar, said the story received some credence in diplomatic circles in Japan. Mr. Collins said the report was that the men had mutinied and attempted to seize the ship, when some of the officers fired the magazine.

Soon after the disaster Admiral Togo went to Tokio to lay a report of the affair before the Emperor.

Gen. Suzuki Visits Annapolis.

ANNAPOLIS, Oct. 8.—Surgeon General Suzuki of the Japanese Navy spent the day in Annapolis as the guest of the officers of the Medical Staff of the Naval Academy. He paid an official call on Admiral Sands, the Superintendent, but as it was Sunday there were no ceremonies in his honor. The day was spent in visiting the splendid new buildings of the academy.

Mikado Honors Miss Roosevelt.

TOKIO, Oct. 8.—Miss Alice Roosevelt passed through this city this morning en route to Nikko. She was met at the station by the Governor of the city and the Imperial Master of Ceremonies and was driven in an imperial carriage to Nyeno, where she took the train for Nikko. She appeared to be in excellent health.

FRANCE STICKS TO RUSSIA.

Semi-Official Temps Strongly Urges Continuation of Alliance.

PARIS, Oct. 8.—The necessity for the maintenance of a Franco-Russian alliance is vigorously urged in the course of a leading article in the semi-official Temps, which points out that the public opinion of both countries is unanimously in favor of the continuance of the alliance.

The article adds that the accords with Italy and Great Britain served to allay annoying misunderstandings; that both were the natural outcome of events, and that France ought categorically to refuse to renounce them.

The Temps, however, does not favor an Anglo-French alliance, which, it says, would be useful to Great Britain, but compromising to France, and probably would create trouble in Europe.

BIG COLLEGE TEAMS SHOW TRUE STRENGTH

Early Games Give a Line on Personnel of Various Elevens.

HARVARD STILL FAVORED

Crimson Seems to Have Good Men Except at End—Penn Has Hard Luck —Columbia Is Disappointing.

The opening games of the college elevens has furnished a line on the leading teams. Harvard's stock, which was decidedly bullish prior to the beginning of play, has taken a bit of a drop, due to the uncertainty that has developed regarding line candidates. By those familiar with Reid's ideas, this was expected, and it is really a hopeful sign for the Crimson.

Squires and Brill at tackles, McFadden and Parker at guards, and White at centre, ought to make a good line from tackle to tackle, and with Pierce or Fultz to step in if need be, the forwards ought to do well. Hurley and Foeter are strong backs, and with Hanley make a good combination, while little Starr can take care of quarter back. O'Brien looks strong enough for one end, but there is not one first-class man in sight for the other.

Harvard came out of the Maine game sorrowfully crippled. Squires broke his thumb, Foster twisted a muscle in his ankle, and Pierce broke a bone in his wrist. Bob Guild, the substitute full back, has broken what Trainer MacMasters calls his "wish-bone." These accidents make the Crimson outlook darker.

Pennsylvania has had hard luck with injuries and Faculty restrictions, and has met reverses on her games because of not running smoothly. The back field with Folwell, Greene, Reynolds, and Stevenson is the best in the colleges. If Boeckmann beats Folwell out for full back he will be strong indeed. With Torrey back at centre and Ziegler, Lamson, and Sinkler back for one wing of the line, and Herr, Draper, and Weede for the other, the Quakers seemed well provided. How Weede's injury will affect them remains to be seen. Herr, the big fellow from Colgate, impresses the coaches as a second Hare. He is powerful and fast. Draper has an ideal physique and a great reputation at the Springfield Training School. Bankhart from Exeter, Rooke and Junk from last year are strong substitutes. Robinson is another good lineman. To find ends seems to be the trouble now.

Princeton is stronger than appeared at first. Dutcher at centre, Dillon and Rafferty at guards, and Cooney and Herring at tackles, with Tooker and probably O'Brien at end, the line will not be weak as Nassau adherents would have one believe. There are many good substitutes as well for line places, some of whom may prove strong enough to win places.

Tenney at quarter back is every bit as good as Burke. McCormick at full back is the equal of Rulon-Miller, and Bard and Simons appear to be first-class half backs. The back field is really giving greater cause for bother than the line, despite the cry about weak forwards.

Nor is Yale the weakling she professed to be. The back field has all along been conceded to be very strong. Hoyt, Veeder, Morse, Flynn, Stevenson, and Dines can be hooked up in almost any way without losing much, and they will compare favorably with any quartet playing. In the line Rorabnck at centre and Tripp and Flanders at guards are about as good a centre trio as one would ask. Forbes at tackle is a strictly first-class man, and Andrews or one of several other new men is available for the other position. At end Cates, Congdon, Jones, or Giles may each develop into first-rate players. Where Yale will be weak in her regular men is not apparent, though one must concede she is badly off for substitutes if her first string is seriously weakened by injuries.

Cornell, with her wealth of material, comes close to having the strongest possibilities on paper of any of the teams. Her game with Bucknell promises well. In every position in the line two men might be named either of whom would be considered first-class with the proper coaching. In the back field she is similarly well equipped.

Every position is peculiarly open. The development of the various men will be The very quantity of good material may be a source of weakness in the end, if there is too much shifting around. With proper coaching of the team, the man who picks the Ithacans to win one of its big games is not unlikely to be wealthier if he backs his opinion well. The next fortnight will be given over to the development of team play.

Columbia's chances do not appear followed closely in the next three weeks. bright. There are not the capable quarter backs her well-wishers would like to see trying for the place. The rest of the back field appears fair. Many Columbia men believe the line will be stronger than last year. More will be known of its capability after it has worked out in two or three games. It is green, and the men look to be strong physically, but how they will work out it will take another fortnight to determine. Her play against Wesleyan was mighty disappointing.

FOOTBALL PLAYERS FIGHT.

Knickerbocker and New Jersey Teams Use Fists and Feet in Game.

The Knickerbocker football team yesterday defeated the New Jersey Athletic Association by the score of 23 to 0. The first half of the game was clean and well contested, but the second resulted in a slugging match, in which several of the players on both teams were badly injured. In the second half each time the teams faced each other fists and feet were freely used. Fuhrman of the New Jersey team was kicked in the head and was unconscious for more than an hour. The visitors brought their own physician, who succeeded in reviving the injured man. This aggravated the New Jersey men, and the fighting was renewed with more vigor. Townsend, the old Columbia player, was taken out of the game for slugging, and Dillon, another Knickerbocker player, was removed for the same offense.

Rauch was in bad shape, his face being used as a target for his opponents' fists. His face was cut and covered with blood. Hogue of New Jersey was another victim of the Knickerbocker players. He was taken out of the game after a severe pummeling, during which his eye was blackened and his lip cut. Several other players on both teams received bad cuts and bruises. Each team was guilty of violating the rules and slugging. The referee made every effort to prevent the fighting, but was powerless.

WIFE SLAYER ARRAIGNED.

Denton Hopkins of Brooklyn Held Without Bail—Sister Held, Too.

Denton H. Hopkins, who shot and killed his wife at 13 Johnson Street, Brooklyn, on Saturday, was arraigned before Police Magistrate Tighe in the Adams Street Court yesterday and held without bail. Mrs. Bruyn, his sister, was also held in $500 bail as a witness. Both were taken to Raymond Street Jail.

Hopkins talked freely to the reporters despite the protests of his lawyers. He said the trouble between him and his wife began the night they were married. Because of their differences Hopkins said that he and his wife became separated twelve years ago, but afterward agreed to live together. Again, he said, after his wife had heaped indignities upon him, they separated last August. Last week he sought a reconciliation and sent a friendly note to her.

In reply to this Hopkins said his wife threatened to shoot him. Because of this threat he armed himself when he went to see her about a business matter.

WOMAN AT WAR WITH MAGISTRATE CONNORTON

Mrs. Allis, a Humanitarian, Talks of Impeachment.

A FRIEND OF THE HORSES

And Declares That When She Has Cruel Drivers Arrested the Court Lets Them Go.

Mrs. Annie G. Allis, who occupies the Curtis cottage on Ocean Avenue, Far Rockaway, and is widely known as a friend of horees and other animals, is seeking to impeach Magistrate Luke J. Connorton of Flushing. She alleges that the Magietrate treated her in open court in a manner that no one need put up with. Meantime, disregarding a summons to appear in court, Mrs. Allis is defying Magistrate Connorton to cause her arrest.

"The whole trouble grew out of my activity in defending horees from cruel drivere and hackmen," eaid Mrs. Allis yesterday. "Any one who cares to spend an hour near the railroad station, especially during the busy Summer seaeon, cannot fail to notice cruelty to horses by the hackmen. I am eo constituted that such sights stir me to action. Invariably I cause the arrest of the driver where it is poesible to get an officer to make the arrest. The police have aided me materially, but I have been balked more timee than one could easily reckon in the Magietrate's court. Magistrate Healy, who lives in Far Rockaway, cannot be criticieed, but when cases come before him in which representatives of the rough element are the defendants adjournments are almost invariably demanded, and those casee are not heard until, in the regular rotation of the Magistrates, Connorton comes to Far Rockaway. Then, almost without exception, even cases in which the evidence is plain, the defendante are discharged.

"Perhaps one reason for Magistrate Connorton's treatment of me is that Mr. Walters of Winn & Walters, contractors, is a close friend of Borough President Joseph Cassidy. In a number of instances I have had occaeion to cause the arrest of meu driving Winn & Walters's horses.

"August Fitter got a eummons for me. It bore Magistrato Healy's name, but Judge Healy told me that he never authorized its issuance. When I appeared in the court a lawyer who appeared for Mr. Fitter said: 'This woman is crazy; she interferes with the business of these men.' There wae no charge read. My attorney demanded that if there was a case against me it be tried, but, as there was no stenographer in court, Magistrate Connorton adjourned the hearing, setting Sept. 1 as the date upon which it should be tried. I have not since appeared in the court, remaining away in the hope that Magistrate Connorton would summon courage to cause my arrest. Magistrate Connorton told me in court that too many of these cases, meaning cruelty to animals cases, are coming before him—that he is tired of them. Then he added that I must stop interfering with the business of drivers in Far Rockaway.

"Fitter alleged that I continually stopped his horees on the public highway, interfering with his work, and preventing passengers from entering the hacks. He also said that I called him bad names. Both allegations are equally untrue, but they appeared to interest Magistrate Connorton, and he refused to hold the man whose arrest I caused."

Mrs. Allis has organized eeveral children's societies, the purpose of which is to protect animals. She has raised money for the erection of several drinking fountains in the Rockaways, and some time ago ehe succeeded in inducing some of the wealthy people of Far Rockaway to contribute the $00 a month that President Haines of the S. P. C. A. said would be required to hire an additional officer for that place. Mrs. Allis alleges that, instead of hiring another officer, one was taken from some other section and stationed there.

TRADE BOOM IN ENGLAND.

All Departments Active—Shipbuilders Booked a Year Ahead.

Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"A steady development is again noted in the trade demand in manufacturing centres, being in many cases far in excess of the productive capacity. Pricee generally ehow advances.

"The grain markets have maintained a fairly steady tone, without important developments.

"Cotton has ruled weak under the more favorable official crop news and the complete break-up of American manipulation. Goods have been in better request and order books are getting well filled. Yarns have been busier, although prices are slightly above last week's.

"Wool has been firm, with prices fully upheld. Satisfactorily increasing trade ie reported from the manufacturing centres.

"The activity in the iron and steel manufacturing districts continues to increase, there having been further advances in both iron and steel. Foreign orders for railway materiale are numerous. Many worke have sufficient orders to keep them engaged for the next six months.

"The shipbuilding departments are heavily booked, in some cases for a year ahead."

TRIES TO DIE IN STREET.

Ambulance's Swift Run May Save a Janitor Who Shot Himself.

Christopher Meister, 67 years old, a janitor at 1,789 Amsterdam Avenue, buried his wife eight months ago and ever since has been talking of euicide. Last night, while standing at the corner of 213th Street and Broadway, Meister suddenly drew a revolver and shot himself in the head.

Policeman Wright sent in a hurry call to Washington Heights Hospital, at 178th Street and Broadway, nearly two and a half miles away. In half a minute Major, the fastest horse in the stable, was in the shafts, John Myers had the reins, and Dr. Block was in the rear seat. In eight minutes Dr. Block was at the side of the uncoascious man. In another minute the ambulance was on the way back. Just eighteen minutes from the time it left the hospital the ambulance was back, having covered about five miles. It was said that Meister had a fair chance of recovery.

THE GAELIC LEAGUE AND ITS GREAT WORK

Dr. Hyde, Its President, Will Lecture Here This Winter.

TO VISIT THE PRESIDENT

Organization Has Made Great Strides In Teaching Irish Language and Reviving Forgotten Customs

Thomas O'Concannon, chief organizer of the Gaelic League in Ireland, has arrived in New York to perfect arrangements for the lecturing tour of Dr. Douglas Hyde, President of the league, who will arrive here Nov. 15.

Dr. Hyde is the author of a score of books in Gaelic and of a monumental literary history of Ireland, and is a scholar of European reputation as well as a fine lyric poet, dramatist, and gifted orator. He had a brilliant career at Trinity College, Dublin, and after filling a professor's chair at the University of New Brunswick for one year, returned to Ireland and began his magnum opus, a collection of Irish folk-lore, four parts of which have already been published.

Dr. Hyde will give his first address at Harvard College, and then make a four months' tour of the United States. President Roosevelt has read a number of Dr. Hyde's works and has invited him to come and see him at the White House. It is expected that the doctor will go to Washington, to meet the President, shortly after his arrival. Mr. O'Concannon, who lived in this country for eome years, was born in Ireland, and taught himself Gaelic while traveling in Mexico. In 1898 he went to Ireland for a short visit, and decided to stay there and devote all his energies to the revival of the Gaelic language and the national epirit which had flickered on through 700 years of oppreesion. He has a vigorous personality, and is not unlike William Jennings Bryan in appearance. In an interview with a TIMES reporter yesterday Mr. O'Concannon said:

"The Gaelic League was founded twelve years ago by six young men, who felt that Ireland was dead. Everybody said that it would fail, but the league hae succeeded beyond the hopes of the very sanguine founders. Sixty years ago Ireland had a population of 8,000,000, and three-fourths of the people spoke Irish. To-day there are thirty branches of the Gaelic League in Dublin, and, roughly speaking, 870 branches throughout Ireland. There are about 100,000 members of the league, and all of them are enthusiasts and fighters for the faith that is in them. Of a population of 4,000,000 today, there are but 860,000 people who can speak Irish. The objects of the Gaelic League are the preservation of Irish as the national language of Ireland, and the extension of its use as a spoken tongue, and the study and publication of existing Irish literature, and the cultivation of a modern literature in Irish.

All Gaelic Leaguers consider themselves bound to support Irish manufacturers, and there exists besides in connection with almost every branch an industrial sub-committee especially charged with looking after Irish industries.

"The policy of the Gaelic League is that of the 'open door,' and not the least of its merits is that it affords a splendid neutral platform upon which Catholic and Protestant and dissenter, Unionist, Nationalist, and Fenian, landlord and tenant, can and do meet in a spirit of the best and heartiest co-operation and good-fellowship. Politics and polemics are unknown in the Gaelic League. Its watchword is Ireland a nation, not an imitation English country."

"What are the material advantages to be gained?"

"The material advantages to be derived from a study of Irish are both direct and obvious. The revival of a national language has always been the forerunner of a general national revival—moral, intellectual, and industrial. It has been so in Bohemia, Finland, Hungary, and Denmark. A national language gives backbone and individuality to a nation. It makes the people independent.

"But we have no quarrel with the English language. We want to make Ireland bi-lingual. We feel that an Irishman's head is large enough to hold two tongues, but first of all his own, and to be Irish in speech as well as in epirit. It would be foolish in the extreme to try and oust the English language from Ireland.

"The number of schools in which the Irish language is taught has advanced from 105 in 1899 to over 3,000 in 1905, and the number of children at present studying Irish in the national schools ie over 100,000. In the schools of the Christian Brothers there ere as many more. Roughly speaking, between Gaelic League classes and the National and Christian Brothers' Schools, there are over a quarter of a million etudente of Irish in the country to-day.

"The oireachtas, or annual feetival of the Gaelic League, ie held in Dublin, to which come to compete for medals, money, and glory the best poets, story tellers, story writers, eingere, dancers, fiddlers, harpers, pipers, and scholare of the nation. In conjunction with the oireachtas there is held an Ard-Fheis of the nation. The joint proceedings extend over a week, and they are attended by thousands of representative Gaels from every quarter of the country.

"Every night during Gaelic week there are either concerts of Irish songs or Irish plays are staged in the largest hall in Dublin. This great hall is nightly packed by appreciative audiences who follow intelligently everything that is sung and acted, although half a dozen years ago by far the great majority probably knew not a word of their own language.

"I am surprised and gratified at the manifestation of keen interest and enthusiasm that Dr. Hyde's coming seems to have awakened. He is really a great orator, and I am sure that American audiences who come to hear him have a great treat in store for them."

The YOUNG MAN and THE WORLD
By SENATOR ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

PLAIN COMMON SENSE.

Few men have been held so highly by the young men of the country as is Senator Beveridge.

Rarely has the career of any one been so encouraging to the young man who expects to "do something."

Why?

Plowboy at 12; logger at 14; graduated from college, De Pauw, at 23; plainman, law clerk, lawyer; United States Senator at 36—that is what Senator Beveridge, poor and without a pull, has done by sheer pluck and hard work. And his steady conservative work in the Senate has won him the equal regard of older men also.

No other man could be better equipped than Senator Beveridge to talk with young men about what they are going to do with their lives.

It is concentrated common sense. It does not preach, scold nor advise tiresomely. It reads like friends talking together.

It counsels cordially. It speaks encouragingly, as comrade to comrade. Full of incident, brilliant with illustration, it reads like a story. It is as forcible, vigorous and healthy as the man himself. No young man of ambition can afford to be without it. It is practically helpful—it gets down to the A B C of living. Not a father nor a mother should fail to put it into the hands of their boys—it will inspire them and fascinate while it inspires. You will read it through if you begin it.

There are twelve chapters—every one of them loaded with that American wisdom called common sense. And the book is bright—not a dull page, not a dull paragraph, not a dull line.

It is written in the Indiana Senator's best style, and the man who cannot get new vigor in reading its crisp chapters is not a live American.

It is not only a brilliant book and a practical book—it is a big book, a big-hearted, big-brained book. It is the frankest kind of a talk between a United States Senator who has been through the mill himself and every young man who must go through the mill himself. It is a talk with the young man of the young man's country by its most prominent young man.

FIREMEN AT THE THEATRE.

No Fire, Though—Moving Pictures on Asbestos Curtain Prevent a Panic.

The Palace Theatre, formerly the Olympic, at 130th Street and Third Avenue, was crowded, mainly with boys and men, at 8:10 o'clock last evening when an alarm box on the stage. Three engines and two hook and ladder companies under Chief Short made a quick response. Just as some black-face comedians were about to go on the stage they were confronted with the firemen, greatly to their astonishment.

As soon as he took in the situation, Stage Manager Harris had the asbestos curtain lowered and the moving pictures thrown upon it. This kept the audience quiet, and many did not know that the firemen were in the house. An investigation failed to disclose any fire, and no one seemed to know how the alarm happened to be sent in. It is thought that some one might have leaned against the box, causing the glass, which is cracked, to press the button.

ANYBODY SEE A FIRE?

One Strayed or Was Stolen In Times Square Early Yesterday.

A fire alarm came in from Forty-second Street and Broadway at 3 A. M. yesterday. A Battalion Chief and ninety-nine firemen raced up.

"Where is it?" asked the Battalion Chief of a man who was on the corner. The man didn't know.

The Battalion Chief waded through the crowd and into the Times Building. The ninety-nine firemen followed. The watchman within didn't know about any fire.

Off trooped the One Hundred and out to the Metropole. The Chief knocked on the door. A waiter responded. No fire there. Off the One Hundred raced to the Rossmore. The clerk there was drowsy.

"You may arrest me," he said, "and you may confiscate the register, but I assure you it's a mistake."

The Chief and his following didn't waste further time there, but rushed across to the Knickerbocker. They surveyed the incompleted building from top to bottom. They couldn't even smell smoke. Then for the drug store. There was no fire there. Off they went to Shanley's. It had begun to be a joke with the crowd. A waiter responded at Shanley's.

"Have you got a fire here?" asked the Chief in evident desperation.

"Don't know. Maybe we have. Wait a minute and I'll ask the cook."

The Chief gave it up then. So did his subordinates. Maybe they'll offer a reward for the fire.

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

The Passport

A splendid romance of modern Italy by Richard Bagot, a writer to whom the public confidently looks always for fiction of the best kind. The London Academy says of this new novel:

"Once more two young people, head over heels in love, are resolved to marry in spite of insuperable difficulties, and once more we hang upon the event as if it had never happened before. Indeed, the reader, who is carried away by the mere momentum of the tale, might do worse than retrace his steps at leisure. For this is a book that will certainly bear reading twice."

MR. HUGHES'S UNFORTUNATE SITUATION.

Judge McKEEN, associated with Mr. HUGHES as counsel of the Insurance Investigation Committee, put his finger on the essential feature of the unfortunate situation created by the nomination of Mr. HUGHES as the Republican candidate for Mayor. "It would in my opinion," he said, "be a misfortune if the investigation should be made to appear in any way auxiliary to a municipal campaign."

The mischief would have been reduced a good deal had Mr. HUGHES promptly, without hesitation, without even the appearance of considering the proposition, absolutely refused the nomination, and done so on the plain ground that it would interfere with the thorough accomplishment of the great work intrusted to him. It would not have been very polite to his party leaders, but it would have been quite within reasonable interpretation of the known facts, had he said that the proposition was intended to interfere with his work. It cannot possibly have any other effect, and the delay in repulsing it is sowing a lot of plausible suspicions which tell against the formation of that clear and confident public opinion on which real reform of the outrageous conditions in the big insurance companies necessarily depends. Mr. ODELL'S scheme of naming Mr. HUGHES for Mayor is taken inevitably as an attempt to "queer" the investigation, and if the scheme goes through, the investigation would be irreparably discredited. Mr. HUGHES, ably assisted by Judge McKEEN and Mr. FLEMING, has made the inquiry extraordinarily searching and independent, so far as it has gone. Especially in unearthing the heavy contributions to party funds, and in exposing the partnership in lobbying and the large expenditures for these purposes which are made without adequate authority and have been covered up by the manipulation of accounts, Mr. HUGHES has started on a road that leads straight to party headquarters and to the halls of the Legislature in which his party has long had undisputed control.

It is at this promising—or threatening—stage of his labors that the Republican machine, under the guidance of ex-Gov. ODELL, proposes to him a nomination which, if he accepted it, would practically reduce to ridicule his position as an investigator. Either he would withdraw from his post as counsel, or, if he essayed to continue in it, he would present himself to the public as a partisan putting the interests of his party above those of the public. As far as he himself is concerned, the scheme of the machine was at once cynical and insulting. It demanded of him that he should sacrifice the honorable reputation he has arduously and patiently attained as an independent searcher for the truth and the right in the hope of transferring to his party some of the prestige he has gained. And the sacrifice would be absolutely futile. He could not transfer his prestige; he would simply lose it. His work as counsel, if he went on with it, would be fatally discredited. If he abandoned it, his candidacy equally would be discredited. It is idle to say that the shrewd and experienced politicians who have laid this trap did not understand exactly what would happen to their victim if he were foolish enough to walk into it. They must be regarded as both foreseeing and wishing the consequences of their trickery. They had their own ends to serve. They were bound to protect the corrupt organization with which the lobbyists of the insurance companies have been dealing, and they did not care a rap what became of the gentleman they are trying to ensnare.

The key to the situation that the Insurance Investigation Committee, under the extremely able guidance of Mr. HUGHES, has created, is not in what has been disclosed, startling as that has been. It is in the plain certainty of what remains behind. Unless that can be brought out into the full light and the guilt of those responsible for it directly or indirectly can be fixed so that it can be punished and so that adequate measures can be taken to safeguard the future, the investigation will be relatively a failure. It will simply establish in the public mind a deep-seated but necessarily vague suspicion as to the folly, the greed, the unscrupulousness, the untrustworthiness of all men in positions of great trust. But if the investigation can be carried forward with the same energy, ability, courage, and impartiality already shown by Mr. HUGHES, the extent and nature of the evil will be fairly ascertained and substantial remedies can be applied. That is not what Mr. ODELL and his associates in the management of the State Republican machine wish. They are doing their best to prevent it. They are trying to reduce the investigation to relative uselessness by withdrawing or by discrediting its counsel. We do not for a moment believe that they will fully succeed, for we are confident that Mr. HUGHES will not yield to them. But the fact that they have undertaken the odious job shows how widespread is the evil of which the investigation has disclosed but a part.

THE CHANGE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

When we compare the position taken by the Massachusetts Republican Convention as to the tariff this year with that taken in the campaign of last year, when the party was beaten, we can see that the party leaders recognize a considerable strength in the popular demand for revision. A year ago the party practically refused to touch the tariff. Senator LODGE maintained that the subject could not be broached without offense to the National organization. The movement of the business men of the State in favor of lower duties on raw materials was treated as betrayal of the principles of the party and an effort was made to read out of the party the leaders in that movement.

This year the movement for lower taxes on materials was officially recognized; advocates of it were placed on the Platform Committee; the need of revision was clearly admitted, and finally the convention urged "for the consideration of Congress the enactment of a tariff provision which shall protect our exports against discrimination and secure to the United States the treatment accorded to the most favored nations in all foreign markets." It was explained by Senator LODGE in the long speech he made to the convention that this implied a maximum and minimum tariff for purposes of negotiation.

We may not get any practical results from this obvious change in the temper of the Republicans of Massachusetts during the next session of Congress, for the "stand-patters" are strong and well organized and have the immense advantage of a defensive position and the possession of what may be called "interior lines," which is as important in political as in military warfare. But in the next session the attitude of the party for the Congressional elections of next year will have to be determined. It is plain that the same forces that have brought about the change in Massachusetts are at work in other sections of the country. Witness, for instance, the remarkable stand taken by The Pittsburg Gazette, in the following rude and graphic terms:

"Stand pat." Grand advice from a sturdy statesman who has passed to the other life. Stand pat always when there is no reasonable chance to draw anything better. When the Hon. M. A. HANNA gave to a poker term a National significance, his party stood pat on a hand that could not have been improved. That hand has been played for five years of unexampled prosperity, and there is clamoring for a new deal.

Discussion such as this has one supreme merit: it arouses attention to the defects and absurdities of the tariff. When Mr. LODGE, for example, enlarges on the wrong done to our exports by "discrimination" he necessarily turns the minds of his hearers or readers to the fact that all our tariff legislation is based on discrimination, that it is avowedly intended to check exports from other countries, and that the heaviest duties with which our own exports are threatened from any country do not offer anything like an offset to the taxes we inflict on the products of those countries. It is in reflections such as these that the final result of the agitation of the tariff by its "friends" will have its effect.

LOOTING FLATS.

Flat looting has assumed the importance and the proportions of a great and profitable local industry. It is a very easy trade to learn and a reasonably safe one to follow. Judging from the reports it must be satisfactorily lucrative. It can be pursued day and night. It seems to demand only a very ordinary amount of judgment and average powers of observation.

For not more successfully interfering with this variety of crime the police are much less to blame than might appear at first glance. A thief who enters an apartment house is as effectually out of sight of the police as if he were in the privacy of his own dwelling. To pass the main entrance is easy enough. Once within he has but to know which door to force to gain access to any apartment temporarily without a custodian. Having gathered up what he wants, he returns to the common hall, and thereafter it is not the business of any tenant to know or care who he is or what is his business. They may pass him on the stairs without the right of challenge or inquiry.

These conditions raise certain extremely interesting questions of law, and it is surprising that not one of the many thousands of victims of the flat looter has had the courage, or his counsel the ingenuity, to test in the courts the measure of a landlord's responsibility for negligence in failing to take proper care, and to maintain a proper oversight, of the parts of the building which are exclusively under his control. The theory that the common hall is an extension of the street would not be likely to stand the test of judicial scrutiny. It is nothing of the sort. From it the landlord may exclude any one who has no business there. He may lock every access from the street and provide his tenants with keys; he may stop every unknown person entering and demand a satisfactory explanation of his business before allowing him to pass. The only persons except the landlord and his agents having the right to enter are the tenants and the members of their immediate families who are known to the servants of the house. This being true, if he permits unauthorized and evil-disposed persons to enter, and affords them opportunity to break locks or force doors, to rob apartments and escape unnoticed to the public street, is he not negligent to an extent which gives the tenant a perfectly good ground for a suit to recover his losses if robbed? So far as we can learn from a study of the digests of decisions in cases of alleged negligence this point seema to be still undetermined. It would seem as if it could not long remain so.

THE FOLLY OF FORAKER.

If Senator FORAKER of Ohio chooses to go to Philadelphia to speak in the current campaign for the indirect benefit of his friend PENROSE, he has a perfect right to do so, but it will be a discreditable thing to do; it will not help the unspeakable machine, and it will hurt Senator FORAKER.

He declares that "of course he will not discuss local issues." But he will distinctly and directly affect local issues, or will try so to do, and he cannot escape responsibility. The local issues are those between decency and rascality. The only possible ground Mr. FORAKER could take if he injects his oratory into the fight will be that it will harm the Republican Party to split on such issues. That is equivalent to saying that Republicanism cannot hold its own if the rascals are turned out. The absurdity as well as the viciousness of such an argument has induced even Senator KNOX and Attorney General CARSON of Pennsylvania to decline to speak for the ring. If Senator FORAKER consents to rush into the vacancies thus created, he will expose himself to very grave suspicion of selfish and unworthy motives, since none of the opposite kind can reasonably be attributed to him.

TYPHOID FEVER IN NEW YORK.

At a conference of local health officers held in Albany a few days ago some statistics of startling interest respecting the prevalence of typhoid fever in New York were presented by Dr. EUGENE PORTER of the State Department of Health. Of these the fact of greatest immediate importance is that since the beginning of 1905 sixty thousand persons residing in this State have been attacked by typhoid fever and that the deaths from this cause in New York City alone have exceeded five hundred. This means that in New York City the number of persons attacked by typhoid since the beginning of 1905 somewhat exceeds thirty thousand. Allowing for everything, it is scarcely probable that with modern methods of treatment and hospitals open to rich and poor alike, the local typhoid mortality exceeds 5 per cent It should be much lower.

Dr. PORTER'S explanation of the causes of this high mortality from a disease which experience has shown to be entirely controllable is undoubtedly correct. He shows that "for a series of years an increasing volume of sewage has been poured into our streams, until practically all are contaminated and many of them are little better than open sewers." From these streams the water supplies of our cities and towns are drawn. Sewage is never wholly free from the deadly poison of typhoid. However great the volume of water into which this mischievous contagion is diluted, it multiplies rapidly, and only under exceptional conditions is it eliminated by natural causes. Filtration accomplishes much in the way of purification and has great value; but it does not make entirely safe water thus polluted, and the reform demanded by the conditions to which Dr. PORTER calls attention is one which local communities cannot initiate. This fact seems to have made itself dimly apparent to the State sanitary authorities at Albany. What they profess their purpose to do about it is thus described by Dr. PORTER with admirable clearness, but perhaps with more confidence than the results thus far accomplished by the State Board of Health may be held to warrant:

The continued pollution of our streams and lakes must stop. Our Summer resorts must be sharply looked after. Many of them are polluting the finest and fairest lakes and streams in our State. Many cases of typhoid are contracted by city visitors to the country during the Summer. The Summer hotel is often a menace not only to its own patrons, but to the unhappy people who use the water it recklessly pollutes. I propose to begin a systematic investigation of the condition of our Summer resorts and hope to lessen the danger of typhoid. The policy of the department is very simple. It proposes to enforce the provisions of the public health law. If an individual or corporation is illegally discharging sewage or other waste matter into any of the streams of this State to the detriment of the well-being of citizens residing on the banks of such streams, the pollution shall be stopped. If nuisances exist threatening the health and lives of any of the people of this State, such nuisances shall be, if possible, abated.

It is probably never too late to begin a great and necessary reform; but the announcement that a beginning is to be made after the typhoid sickness rate has attained the proportions of some seven thousand cases a month in a population of probably less than eight millions suggests the pertinent inquiry: Why was it not begun long ago? The facts pointed out by Dr. PORTER are not new discoveries. They have been known for at least half a century to every student of State medicine. Indeed, they are the commonplaces of elementary sanitary science. Why has our State Board of Health, if invested with the power to do what Dr. PORTER promises, not done it this dozen years past? What its negligence has cost the State would exceed manifold the cost of the most comprehensive measures for the protection of the watercourses of the State.

The next step in the progress of civilization will be away from the present method of imitating in modern sanitary practice the example of Hercules in the cleansing of the Augean stables. To wash away our wastes by floods of water is convenient, perhaps, but it merely transfers to the streams and rivers the nuisances we seek to be rid of. Besides, we cannot find water enough for the purpose, unless we draw it from already polluted streams, and these streams are needed for uses demanding pure water. When the fact is realized that for most of our communities nothing but dilute sewage is available a great reform will be possible, and probably not until then.

THE RAINES LAW NUISANCE.

It is not surprising, but it is extremely disgusting, that the utmost devices of the legal profession are exhausted to delay the abatement of the peculiarly revolting form of nuisance, the vicious Raines law hotels. When the Ambler law was passed at the last session of the Legislature it was hoped that the worst abuses of this sort could be done away with. Practically little definite result has been as yet attained.

Dr. JOHN P. PETERS, the energetic Chairman of the Committee of Fourteen, reports that evidence was promptly secured on which the licenses of some hundred of the worst places were revoked. But the proceedings to close the places are delayed by endless postponements and by the granting of injunctions, the hearings of which are in their turn postponed, while the wretched debauchery to which the places are devoted cannot be stopped. District Attorney JEROME has now undertaken to proceed criminally against the places under the original law. Then when the decision as to the constitutionality of the Ambler law is made final—it has been declared constitutional by two Justices of the Supreme Court and is now before the Appellate Division—it is hoped that more thorough work can be done. Dr. PETERS and his committee deserve credit for the persistence and intelligence with which they have pursued a task at once difficult and, in some degree, thankless.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

End of a Wall Street Myth.

It will be, we think, a cause of great and general surprise that while the "Mr. Raffles," whom one of our local contemporaries says it is sending to various parts of the city with an offer of $300 to anybody who recognizes him, has been an unmitigated nuisance to everybody wherever he went—or was supposed to go—he did not cause any serious trouble until he invaded—or was supposed to invade—the Wall Street district. The multitudes of us who do not know very much about that region would have predicted with the utmost confidence that a man from whom nothing more than the trivial sum of $300 was to be secured, extorted, or otherwise obtained, would be unable there to create even a ripple of excitement. "What," we would have asked derisively, "is $300 in a financial maelstrom where millions float around like chips in the abundant water? Who would waste his time in even crossing the street for what could hardly be dignified by the name of small change, or, as it is sometimes called, chicken feed?" But what happened? At the appointed time Wall Street and all its vicinity filled up with an enormous throng, not eager, but simply mad, for that poor little $300 of real money! Men who looked no more like the pictures of "Mr. Raffles" than they looked like the Dowager Empress of China or the President of an insurance company when trying to smile at Mr. HUGHES were seized with frantic vehemence, and when they denied that there was either anything mysterious or $300 about them they were savagely beaten by the disappointed denizens of America's greatest money centre. It was a lamentable and pathetic spectacle, and it will do more than anything that ever occurred to confirm the country's already stalwart suspicion that Wall Street is not quite the calm abode of bald-headed philanthropists it has always pretended to be. Many a widow and orphan who otherwise would have drifted into that impressive cañon with much more than $300 to "invest"—after the immemorial custom of widows and orphans—will lose the touching confidence they have hitherto had in securities promising 15 per cent. interest, and almost inevitably they will go somewhere else and intrust their hard-earned inheritances to men who do not need them half as much as do the assorted brokers and bankers and promoters who by a sort of natural affinity daily drift into the edifying neighborhood of Trinity Church. This is serious business, and we commend it to the attention of the police. Not only does the elaborately advertised rumor of "Mr. Raffles" directly tend to breaches of the peace, not only has it already produced such breaches, but it has seriously shattered one of New York's few illusions and has subjected all the widows and orphans of what has been the well-recognized Wall Street variety to the danger of going further and faring worse—which would be nothing less than hideous.

Our Surgeons Have a Grievance.

Surgeons in the United States Army are not enjoying the current eulogies of their Japanese brothers in the profession. They have not a word to say in depreciation of the achievements of the Mikado's military doctors; on the contrary, they are frank and warm in their recognition that those doctors have done more than doctors ever did before in any country to keep an army in fighting condition and in the quick restoration to that condition of members of it that have been wounded. What does grieve and anger the American surgeons is the frequent implication that the Japanese medical service is not only better than the same service here, but that the superiority is due to some personal superiority in skill or knowledge on the part of the Japanese surgeons. That impression does exist, but there is not the slightest basis for it except ignorance. The secret of the whole matter is that the Japanese medical service was organized after sanitation became a science—our own, and those of all the European nations, before that point was reached. As a result the Japanese surgeons are not considered merely as doctors to care for the sick and wounded soldiers, but as most important military officers, whose chief duty it is to protect the health of their army. Without disturbing any rigid and long-established system, and without encountering the fierce antagonism of line officers, to whom sanitary precautions seem to be mostly meddlesome interference with the business of beating the enemy, the Japanese surgeons were placed at the front, where they belonged, and, what counted most of all, there was conferred upon them the authority and the power to execute the measures they deemed necessary. No such conditions have hitherto existed in the United States Army, do not exist now, and the effort to create them there has been, is, and will be opposed by men of enormous influence, who, with the best of intentions, set themselves in the way of reforms incompatible with their antiquated notions of the art of war. We have and long have had army surgeons as good as any in the world—surgeons who know all that is to be known about sanitation and preventive medicine—surgeons who can without conceit or unkindness claim to be better equipped than the very best of the Japanese surgeons. The trouble has been and is that they have not been and are not permitted to utilize their abilities to anything like the best advantage. These are facts, and they deserve the earnest consideration of the legislators who will soon be called upon to take action on a bill for the improvement of our army medical service.

Advertising for Mr. Rockefeller.

One of our correspondents has been moved to declare that we are not giving enough space in our news columns to Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and to suggest that we have a Rockefeller page or a special Rockefeller section. We can enjoy sarcasm of good quality, even when it is directed against ourselves, but in this case it does seem to be based on something less than a full knowledge and appreciation of the facts, and that therefore it contains a ponderable element of injustice. It is quite true that we have printed many dispatches about Mr. ROCKEFELLER in his various phases and activities, and that we have frequently commented on such information as we have been able to secure. But we are sure that the dispatches, at least, have always been interesting, even to our sarcastic correspondent—it's evident that he has read them—and we "have faith to believe" that the comment was not always as dull as it might have been. At any rate, we are not going to weep over either—not going to promise a change of policy. It seems to us that it would be absurd to ignore Mr. ROCKEFELLER. He is a large and important figure in American life—a figure not the less gigantic because it is in many ways sinister and menacing. The only way not to see him from almost any point of view is to close one's eyes, and we do not consider that a profitable attitude. It is not our present purpose to start a Rockefeller page or a Rockefeller section, but we shall certainly do so as soon as the one course or the other seems necessary or judicious, and meanwhile we shall devote such space to him as in our opinion his importance as a social and economic factor deserves. He interests us and we believe he interests other people—legitimately.

WAS CHAFFEE CHAFFING?

London Journal Thinks He Made a "Faux pas" at Bar-sur-Aube.

From The London Globe.

Gen. Chaffee of the United States Army is not to be congratulated on the taste of the "allocution" recently delivered by him at Bar-sur-Aube. Toward the conclusion of the French manoeuvres Gen. Brugere entertained the representatives of the foreign armies at a banquet, and after he had proposed their health in the customary fashion, and after the senior officer present, the Danish General, had responded, the distinguished Frenchman gave a special toast—President Roosevelt.

The occasion for this remarkable compliment was, of course, the great services which have been so recently rendered to humanity by the President's successful mediation in the Far East. But Gen. Chaffee thought fit to travel from the present to the past and "rub in" the alliance between his own country and France during the War of American Independence. A reference to Lafayette and Rochambeau was perhaps inevitable, but when he dwelt in plain terms upon the capitulation of Yorktown dismay was seen reflected upon the countenance of his well-bred host. Gen. Brugere's banquet was no family function; twenty-two of the armies of the powers were represented, all in uniform, and most strictly "at attention" as regards any disparagement of their respective countries.

When wa add that the American General spoke in English, and that the full flavor of his remarks must thus in a special sense have been appreciated by the British military representative who was present on the occasion, the full extent of his breach of good manners will be realized. America has indeed good reason to be grateful to Franca for her support in 1777-81.

It was not the armies of Washington and Greene, nor yet the contingent of Lafayette, to which the recognition of their independence was due. It was to tha temporary loss of the control of the sea by Great Britain, a loss occasioned by the French fleets and sailors, and Washington himself has given the honor and credit for the fall of Yorktown to Admiral de Grasse.

Peculiarities of Malta Fever.

From The London Telegraph.

The scientific commission which has been investigating the peculiarities of the Mediterranean or Malta fever appears to heve come upon evidence which shows that the infection of the disease may be transmitted by goats. Dr. Zammit and Major Horrocks, R. A. M. C., found the specific organism of tha fever in the milk of goats that were apparently healthy. The blood of several of the goats gave a reaction which is peculiar to the fever. This finding is not only important for Malta, but for many other places within the Mediterranean area. Gibraltar is one of these where this fever is vary prevalent, and goats are almost the only source of the milk supply.

Police Logic.

From The Chicago Chronicle.

Police logic, it appears, is much the same everywhere. Thus when a woman was discovered gagged and unconscious in New York the other day the police of that city, failing to find her assailant, pointed out that the woman must necessarily have gagged herself and then knocked herself senseless, having first robbed herself of all her money and jewelry. This sounds enough like the Chicago system of police ratiocination to have come from any one of half a dozen lynx-eyed ornaments of the local force.

Sultan's Legacy of "Mourning."

From The Pittsburg Gazette.

The latest estimate places the number of the Sultan's wives at 700. Tha amount of "mourning" they will consume, at $2 a yard, when the Sick Man finally shuffles off, is enough to make the contemplative married man shudder.

OUR DOLLARS IN ENGLAND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your London correspondent who states that Southwark Cathedral is being restored by some 9,000 American dollars added to 1,000 presumably English ones, tells us either too much or too little.

Southwark's Collegiate Church of St. May Overies was restored some years ago at a cost running into hundreds of thousands of dollars prior to its elevation to the rank of cathedral, and no one who has visited it would suspect from its modernized appearance that further restoration were possible. Your correspondent probably refers to the renovation of some chapel in the cathedral.

To write of restoring a building approaching St. Patrick's Cathedral here in size, for the sum of $10,000 is manifestly absurd, and yet statements like these, abounding in such unbalanced terms, are apparently accepted without question this side of the Atlantic, and are the parents of those frequent remarks about Americans restoring English public buildings that Englishmen have to listen to continually.

Such a telegram to an influential paper like THE TIMES will now doubtless go the rounds of provincial papers and become "fact."

It is perhaps hard for Americans to understand the reality of interest taken by English people in their public monuments and the amount of money spent in maintaining them.

A visit to the cathedrals would enlighten one as to the amount of work going on and as to the foolishness of such statements.

GOTHAMITES WERE WISE.

There Appears to Have Been a Distinct Method In Their Madness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The item in to-day's TIMES from The Boston Herald is interesting reading, but the paragraph, "Gotham was an English village, whose inhabitants, renowned for stupidity, were the butt of English humor as far back as the Middle Ages," revives a misleading impression to which modern research has given a double complexion. In view of the existing conditions, it is democratically debatable whether the original Gothamites "were such fools as they looked."

The following modern version giving details of the origin of their fame for stupidity is one of four containing the same information, to be found in recently published American encyclopedias:

"Gotham: A village in Nottinghamshire, England, whose inhabitants, unwilling to support the additional expense of a royal estate, engaged with common accord in all manner of idiotic pursuits, when King John proposed visiting the place with the view of purchasing a castle and grounds, and sent messengers to prepare for his reception. The amazed courtiers reported the place 'a village of fools,' and the royal project was abandoned. The inhabitants remarked, 'More fools pass through than remain in Gotham,' and they became known as the 'wise men of Gotham,' a term, however, which passed in English literature as satirically synonymous with 'fool,' whence its sarcastic application to New Amsterdam—New York City under the Dutch—by Irving and Paulding in their 'Salmagundi;' New York citizens are sometimes familiarly called Gothamites."

AFTER McCALL, WHAT?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Of course Mr. McCall will have to go, but who will fill his place? Somebody "just as good"? I believe, in this connection, that it would be interesting reading if you could run over your files covering the period, about twenty years ago, when Mr. Beers was under fire and republish a few of the favorable comments—of press and citizens—passed on John A. McCall when he was "called" to the Presidency of the New York Life vice Beers, resigned. There are men living in this community to-day who have the temerity to say that politics and politicians forced old Mr. Beers out and put McCall in. Query: When McCall goes, what assurance will the policy holder have that his successor will not develop the same bad traits from which the present incumbent of it is now a sufferer?

As an old reader of THE TIMES, permit me to congratulate you on the evident fairness, impartiality, and independence which seem to pervade every page of your newspaper. Papers thus conducted give assurance that our liberty will be maintained.

INSURANCE FOR THE INSURED.
New York, Oct. 1, 1905.

That Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I do not wish to take too great advantage of your courtesy in order to convey information to Mr. E. Landau; besides, it would be useless, for, evidently, it is beyond the compass of his capacity to keep all the parts of an argument together and make them unite in one issue.

My letter of Sept. 30 was written to call attention to the fact that England, through Canning, and to offset "the Holy Alliance," having "egged on" the United States into a nebulous declaration called the "Monroe Doctrine," has now rendered this so-called American policy not only inoperative but supremely ridiculous by her treaty with Japen, full significance and gravity of which THE TIMES alone of all American newspapers has exposed. Therefore, despite Mr. Landau, the world is not yet prepared to accept England's absolute batrayal of the true interests of the rest of the Caucasian race. For the historians Ranke and Freeman merely followed Montesquieu, who formulated the theory—the outcome of experience—that soil and climate make a people, and that consequently the highest type of man will always be found on the most advantageous ground, viz., the Continent of Europe.

Certainly England has made a poor return for the official moral support given by this country in her behalf in the Boer war—a war which was practically characterized by the final battle of Paardeberg, thus described by an English officer: "A field of battle like a sancer, with English troops around the rim, firing into a centre where women and children, driven from their hiding places by the fumes of sulphur, were shot down without any means of resistance." Is Bryant Park Neglected?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In passing through Bryant Park I cannot help noticing its slovenly appearance. Papers strewn over the grass, loafers fast asleep and sprawled out over tha benches are common sights. Besides this, the grass is fast wearing off over triangular sections, and that of the remainder is not in the trim and neat condition it should be. Are the people to have four more years of this? To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the space occupied by your daily laudations of Mr. Rockefeller is paid for by Standard Oil money it seems to me those effusions belong on your advertising pages rather than in tha news columns of a great metropolitan paper like THE TIMES.

ROOSEVELT LATINIZED.

An Italian Poet Praises His Deeds in Classic Verse.

Special Correspondence of The Springfield Republican.

BOSTON, Thursday, Oct. 5.—An Italian Latinist in a New York newspaper, Il Telegraf, has piled fame and heaped laurels upon our Teddy, even calling him by that familiar name in the beginning of an Archilochian minor verse. He might have used the Archilochian major, in addressing so great a potentate; unless he thought Colonels should not be addressed in terms applicable only to Majors. I have not seen the whole ode—only eight verses of it reported in The Evening Post. Naturally he begins with war, but I shall take up first the four lines in which The Telegrafic warbler sings the blushing peacemaker of Portsmouth:

Nobilis O salve tu Washingtonia proles!
Te dnce non Scytheus
Nipponicusque cruor maculabunt aequor Eoum
Te auspice magnanimo!

I omit commas as unbecoming to the movements of so swift a hero—never comatose, seldom reaching even a full stop; his favorite point is the dash. Thus I render it, in verse unequaly Archilochian:

Excellent, O hnllo! Thou Washingtonian prolix,
Teddy, see; no cussed Russ,
Tapped in his claret, nor Jap, any more shall stain the Pacific.
Magnanimous! Referee!

And now for his warlike exploits, "alone in Cuby":

Tuque decora cui circumdedit ora Corona
Fortis ad arma Cuba
Per juga fuimineum cum Mississippius ardens
Te sequeretur eques.

This stanza gives me pause. Is "Corona" nominative or ablative? Is Cuba ditto? What does "fuimineum" agree with? My version must then be subject to conjectural emendation from Mr. Roosevelt himself, whose acute knowledge of Latin was long ago certified by a Democratic member of the New York Assembly from Brooklyn. When the young hero from New York City was charged by a brother Democrat with having put himself "in a quasi position"; (this has frequently happened since 1882;) "I'd have the gintleman from X. understand," quoth the Brooklyn unterrified, "that Misther Roosyvelt knows more Latin in a minute than he does in a wake." However, as at present advised, and subject to such changes in Latin syntax as have come over the Constitution of 1787, since it has been under discipline at Oyster Bay, I thus overset the verses:

Teddy, my boy, whose features fine would set off a crown well,
Strenuous, uphill, alone,
San Juan heard thee thunder, but swiftest trans-Mississippi
Cowboys after thee tagged.

Will the Senators be as obedient as the rough riders? That is the question when it comes to getting a White House side hug on the life insurance subsidizers of lawmakers and campaign committees; and establishing dominion over the railroad rates for freight and private cars, and the switches that shunt off rebates into the right pockets, as in Paul Morton's misplaced instance. There will be several points at which Congress will recalcitrate or kick, (if I must come down from resounding Latin to vulgar colloquial Cannonese.) It will take some time to persuade members who are up for re-election that life insurance is inter-State commerce, but I can give them an unanswerable proof. Did not the money contributed by McCall, McCurdy, and other life insurance autocrats purchase the Presidency in 1896? and could that have been done without inter-State commerce? I trow not. For particulars see what the Armstrong committee is going to find out next.

WOMEN VERSUS THE SMOKERS.

Former Want Cars to Themselves if the Latter Have Them.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letters of "O. S. S." and "Sufferer" have been read with appreciation. To the observations made by them allow me to add a plea for the enforcement of the "Smoking Strictly Prohibited" signs in the ferryhouses. It is a daily wonder how many apparently educated men are unable to read these signs. This is especially the case in the Brooklyn Wall Street ferryhouse, where the atmosphere, particularly in rush hours, is full of stale tobacco smoke, and the only way one can breathe fresh air is to stand out doors, regardless of weather conditions. Are the ferryhouses built for the protection and accommodation of men, women, and children, or for smokers only?

The street railway companies also fail to enforce their rules, and a number of times this Summer, in the new cars of the Nostrand Avenue line, smoking has been permitted all over the car, although the signs distinctly say that smoking is to be confined to the last four seats. The Greene and Gates Avenue line went so far as to run cars for "smokers only" (so labeled) to South Ferry daily for some time, and the women who needed these cars were compelled to use them or go to the inconvenience of transferring at City Hall.

If the smokers receive so much consideration, why cannot the railway companies run cars for "women only," as well as for "smokers only"? The thousands of women who are compelled daily to use public conveyances would no doubt appreciate this courtesy as much as the smokers, who overstep their privileges daily.

KOMURA.

You have beaten the swords into plowshares.
Clasped hands with the Russian and gone,
And the victories won by Oyama
Were naught to the triumphs you won;
You dared to do right, as you knew it,
Nor recked what the mob thought or said,
You knew of the rivers run gory
And had counted the roll of the dead.

You gave when you need not have given,
You gave when you might have withheld;
You yielded, though you were the master,
Compromised when you might have compelled;
For you the abuse of the moment,
Nor plaudits now garlands for you,
But the ages, serene and impartial,
Will hail you a wise man and true.

You may smile and be calm and untroubled
As the seas that encircle Nippon;
The peace of our Christ and your Buddha
Is the peace you have builded upon.
The structure is fair to the seeing,
You've builded it bravely and strong.
Not reared for the years that are fleeting,
But to loom through the centuries long.

MR. CARNEGIE'S NEW TRIPLE ALLIANCE

Appeals to Frenchmen for a Franco-English-American Trinity.

A GREAT HUMANIZING SCHEME

Fundamental Reasons Why the Three Powers Should Unite—Even Room for the Deutsche Kaiser.

BY ANDREW CARNEGIE.

Translated for THE NEW YORK TIMES from the Echo de Paris.

The treaty of fellowship concluded between England and France is an event far more important than the elevation of Japan to the rank of a great power.

National bickerings seemed to have made the two neighbors irreconcilable enemies. At the mere mention of the word "war" a baleful remembrance of France arose in English memories, and that of "Perfidious Albion" invaded the minds of the French.

In my childhood, when I lived in Scotland, I remember how my friends and I used to play soldiers and build forts of sand and wood to resist the invading French. The shadow of Napoleon still hung over us.

To-day, far from galling each other, France and England realize that they have been following different paths; each has fulfilled the mission most in conformity with her genius, and consequently the most useful.

The exactions of time efface everything—even hate. In the Crimea, in Egypt, in China, Frenchmen and Englishmen have been united and have fought side by side. The English occupation of Egypt, indeed, awakened dark memories, and the Transvaal war was not destined to remove them, but years passed, and the hour struck for the dawn of a new and sincere fellowship. It was time for each to exchange confidences regarding their respective destinies.

On her side France has little to show as a colonizing nation. Her people do not take kindly to expatriation; the soil of France is too attractive. Nothing in the world so appeals to the Frenchman as his native land—and how very many foreigners partake of this opinion! The soil of France—that land of beauty—was created by the genius of a race pre-eminently artistic, and one may say that from the point of view of art France has a more unquestioned monopoly than, for example, the United States have in regard to cotton manufacture. France can no more lose this privilege than can the United States fear being dethroned as king of cotton. I even admit that elsewhere than in America cotton fabrics may be made just as well as there, but I refuse to believe that any other people can ever equal the French nation in art. France is the emporium for luxury of the world.

ENGLISH APTITUDES.

On her side, England, akin to the United States, reveals special aptitudes for the production of cumbersome articles, such as are made by the aid of iron, steel, and coal. England, from her confined homestead, has become first among colonizing nations. This little isle, flanked by Ireland, possesses an empire which occupies a quarter of the earth's surface. In ships she has a tonnage greater than that of all the rest of the world put together.

France, on the other hand, handicapped by her natural poverty in coal, cannot readily develop her merchant marine. The contrast between the two countries is complete. England dominates the seas which surround her and confine the principal part of maritime commerce. France rather prefers to enhance her own land, and her soil, divided into 10,000,000 small farms devoted to garden culture, is the wonder of the world.

England peoples distant climes; France beautifies her own clime like a garden. The first ships away a prodigious quantity of articles of practical utility; the second supplies the world with a thousand and one delicate and inimitable things. England and France are the complements of each other, not the rivals. Not only is there room for both in the world, but the possibility of conflict between them is reduced to a minimum. Each fills a different sphere. Each can sincerely desire the advancement of the other. And this is why, when the complete accord of these two traditional enemies was announced to the world, all reasonable beings received the news with joy. The question of Egypt was assuredly the most luminous firebrand of discord; France has consented to allow England to govern Egypt, and, in return, England has approved of the action of France in Morocco.

In short, the two antagonistic powers, escaping from the thralldom of nightmares and hatred, perceive that it is their interest henceforth to esteem each other and to live like good neighbors. It is a happy end to so much hostility hurtful to the destiny of both illustrious countries, whose rôle was so great in the past, and who now unite for all future time the most cheering hopes for their own good fortune and that of humanity.

ENTER THE UNITED STATES.

The United States, as the son of England and the godson of France, holds these two countries by close bonds. Does one need to be reminded that the good-fellowship that has been established between France and England has warmly interested the American Republic? There is not a student of economics, not a politician who has not made it the object of his meditations.

The bare possibility of hostilities between America and France holds, for the future, no place in our range of vision. The shades of Washington and Lafayette would turn such a picture into a crime. Whatever comes, whatever differences may arise between us, will be settled in a friendly way.

Recently our sympathies for France have measurably augmented because she has assumed toward the Church an attitude similar to that of her sister republic. In separating State and religion and by declaring herself the protector of all creeds and the enemy of none, France comes near to the American heart.

I have said that the missions of France and England conform to their respective destinies. The same is true of the United States.

The United States are not merely one nation, but forty-five different nations, living under the same flag and under the rule of free communication. Each one of these States has its particular autonomy, but resigns to the National Legislature in Washington a part of its powers. The territory of the United States is larger than that of all Europe. All climates are there. Our mineral resources are not second to our agriculture—both are incalculable. Thus it is as Green has said: The United States should become the new home of the English race and language.

For each of the last three years our population has been increased by 2,000,000—solely by the influx of immigrants. It is difficult to fix the figure that will be reached by the mass of industrious and ambitious people streaming from Europe, all of whom, from the second generation, form but one people, all speaking English and resolved to be faithful to the same fundamental principles of politics. The population, which is now in the neighborhood of 83,000,000, will reach that of all Europe. The capacity of the United States is sufficiently extensive, and their local market—ever on the increase—will continue to absorb all their products. Only 4 per cent. of our commodities go abroad.

AMERICA'S DESTINY.

The American applies and perfects. His energy is increased by the stimulating influence of the climate. A fine intelligence, a wide-awake mind, courage, sobriety, and the eagerness to press constantly forward are his unrivaled qualities; and if republican institutions are so much to his liking, it is that he considers them as the incomparable inspirers of force. From his cradle he learns that rank and fortune are insignificant things; rank makes slight impression on him, for he holds his position as a free man superior to the most exalted. Fortune he undertakes to acquire. If he does not entirely succeed, he is not disturbed, for, so long as he can work, he saves from his income and provides for a competency which gives him independence.

In every American there is an Englishman. That is why America will not compete with artistic France, nor with England, at least in her superior products of textile industry and in some other enterprises. Her essential rôle to-day consists in manufacturing articles of common utility for the masses. From the political point of view her laws and institutions will remain in conformity with present rules of action, toward which England will approach nearer and nearer in her advance toward pure democracy. From the point of view of international politics, the United States will quite likely resist the temptation to colonize and will apply themselves with more care to the administration and development of their continental territory. They will not, therefore, be the rival of any colonizing nation.

A NEW TRIPLE FELLOWSHIP.

While France and England are becoming reconciled, the United States and England will strengthen the bonds which unite them, thanks to the good influence of the late Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain.

England refused to take part against the United States in the Spanish-American war and observed a strict neutrality. This conduct made a more lively impression in America than all other former proofs of sympathy. President McKinley and the late Col. Hay often declared this. To-day the American people are convinced that the bonds of blood defy time and space, and that their principles of civil and religious liberty are held in common by England. And it should be vigorously proclaimed that all parties—those of the United States as well as those of England—must have and do have the desire to draw more closely those natural bonds which unite the two families of one race and one language to generous France.

Behold, then, the establishment of a trinity of world-dominating nations, sincerely dedicated to safeguarding a lasting peace on the most simple basis—a diversity of paths as distinct as their geographical situation and their ethical genius. You may add to that the similarity of their institutions, based, as they are, upon this identical principle: the government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

This trinity is made up of two republics without crowns and of one crowned republic. As a matter of fact, there are three sister republics existing in the shadow of hereditary dynastic fantasies sufficiently imbued with the rights and duties of the individual to have no fear of the autocratic minority's tyranny. This community of fate ought to serve them most strongly in the steady development of their fortune. And the day will come in the history of the world when a decisive influence might and should be exercised by the concerted action of the three brother-peoples.

A PLACE FOR GERMANY.

Let the world understand once and for all that the three great, free, and united nations purpose to maintain peace by arbitration, and not by war. Soon others will join them. I behold France, England, and the United States united for the purpose of establishing universal peace and toiling together for the extension of civilization on the earth. It does not seem to me that this should be a chimera. Shall not this be the first achievement realized in the twentieth century? And may we not see in the near future the incorporation in this pacific alliance of the German power, already practically the kinsman of England and the United States. Then never more could the dangers of war be conjured up between Germany and France, America, or England, or between any other two of these powers. The burden of armaments would no longer weigh heavily upon Europe, relieved of this charge by the example of the United States.

Let us keep up this luminous hope and let us amuse ourselves with the idea that the extraordinary man who rules the destinies of Germany will awake some day just as fervent and sincere a friend of peace as the leaders of the three united people, and, while waiting, let us rejoice to behold that a radiant peace shines forever more over France, England, and America. Truly the world does move forward.

ARCHBISHOP TO ITALIANS.

Mgr. Farley Looks to Them as the Chief Bulwark of the Faith.

Archbishop Farley blessed the new structure of the Italian Roman Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception in William's Bridge yesterday morning. The Archbishop also confirmed a class, the first ever presented in the parish. The Archbishop was assisted by the Rev. Patrick Lennon, rector of the parish.

Father Lennon raised the money, $13,000, to build the new church. One woman, a Protestant, gave $2,000 to the fund.

In his address yesterday the Archbishop said:

"My children, you should be the happiest people in all New York this morning. You have here a most beautiful church, the gift to you in large part of others not of your blood or your nation. To protect you and your children they have made great sacrifices. You must be aware that there are those who are seeking to destroy your faith. You must know that there are societies spending thousands and thousands of dollars annually to take from you the faith you have brought from the fatherland; they would teach your children another faith. You, my children, can help to repay those who have thus aided you by giving to your faith that loyalty which rightfully belongs to it. The Church looks to her Italian children in this city to be the chief bulwark of the faith in the future."

Robert Edeson to Entertain the Giants.

Robert Edeson, who is a baseball enthusiast, will entertain the Giants at the Harlem Opera House on Tuesday night. For the evening performance of "Strongheart" the management has set aside four boxes for the use of the champions. The theatre will be decorated, and the 1905 pennant will be displayed over the box occupied by Manager John McGraw and Capt. "Dan" McGann.

TALE OF A GENERAL WHO SOUGHT A JOB

How He Learned a Lot About Employment Agency Signs.

GENERAL WANTED, ONE READ

But It Wasn't That Kind of a General—The Lady Needed Only a House Cleaner.

Señor José Caliento Mighuels, sometime Generallissimo of an army of 317 revolutionists in Southern Colombia, but months ago a hasty arrival in New York—for reasons of his own—stood three days ago scrutinizing a board in front of a Sixth Avenue employment agency. It read like this:

WANTED—8 chambermaids; 1 head cook and 2 seconds; 4 manglers; 3 scrubwomen; 7 waiters; 1 general.

When the General's eye and mind had taken in the word "general" among the wants his drooping form straightened, the old haughty expression came to his face, and he almost yelled a command at a passing truckman. He dandied up a bit the somewhat seedy clothing that covered his spare figure.

"'Tis a great America!" he said, a triumphant smile lighting up the bronzed and peaked face of Gen. José Caliento Mighuels. "'Tis a great America! Secretary was the best I had hoped for in all these many weeks while the pesos flew from me. But here is desired a General. And officers hold their jobs in this country a year at a time. Ah, 'tis a very great America!"

And then Gen. José Caliento Mighuels walked upstairs and into a crowded anteroom. Presently a boy came to look him over and to ask shortly: "Job?"

"I would see the President, or the Superintendent—or what is it you call him?"

"The boss, I guess."

"Si, Señor."

And presently the General sat in front of "the boss." He opened his mouth to tell the history of his life—how he was born at Aumea, on the River Caqueta, in Southern Colombia; how he had always been a leader, even at school; how he had led thirteen revolutions almost to success; how he had fled several times to the United States, not out of fear, but to wait for more auspicious times; how he knew somewhat the language of the country and the lay of the land; how he was just now in the prime of his life and ready for anything; how he would not expect too much at the beginning in the way of salary.

But he didn't get to tell anything of that. "The boss" asked him three questions, collected a fee, and gave him a Harlem address.

The General hurried to the address. He told the girl at the door that he was the General sent up by the employment agency. In a minute he stood before the newly wed girl, who had come up from the South to marry her prospering Charlie. Bowing low, Gen. José Caliento Mighuels said:

"You desired a General. I am he."

"Oh, a general? Yes, that's what they call them, these people who so economize their words. But I didn't know men really did that kind of work, although the agency man said they were doing more and more of it now, especially in England and on the Continent."

The General did not know how to take this, and she gave no more details. He thought the salary she offered him ridiculously low, but he was too gallant to haggle with a lady. And then, of course, there would be the spoils if the plot—whatever it might be—was successful.

"Come at 9 o'clock in the morning," she said, smiling. "And come in your working clothes. There is much work to be done right away."

Gen. José Caliento Mighuels walked on air back to his hall bedroom in Second Avenue.

He spent the greater part of the night polishing his trusty sword and tidying up his uniform. He wondered what plot was on foot, what dark scheme this apparently ingenuous but positively beautiful young woman was at the head of. He was ready for anything, he told himself.

At 7 o'clock the next morning Gen. Mighuels stood in full regalia before the little mirror in his room. He was satisfied with himself. Throwing a cloak over his gorgeous gold-braided self, he strode forth for the appointed work.

"It is I, the General," he whispered to the girl at the door.

"Well, you needn't get nutty about it," he was told. But he didn't know what "nutty" meant.

He was led to an upstairs room, where the apparently ingenuous young woman was. Gen. José Caliento Mighuels flung off his cloak. He stood bending low before the arch plotter. His sword rattled frightfully, his gold-braided clothes dazzled her.

"I am here," he said, coming to an erect military position. "I am here in my working clothes, you call them. I am ready for the orders."

The young wife was taken aback for a minute. Then she saw or thought she saw, and she laughed.

"Your orders?" she said, when she had recovered from her admiration and amazement. "Well, to-day you can put up these pictures. To-morrow some carpets and matting must be put down. Then there will be the usual work in a little household, you know—hanging out clothes, washing dishes sometimes, keeping the backyard in order, washing the windows, and—but there is a great mistake somewhere, I am sure." And then she ceased to laugh.

Gen. José Caliento Mighuels threw his cloak about his spare form and stalked from the room.

"I know," he said. "I know what it is. It is a plot of my enemies. I go back there. I start to-morrow. I raise a revolution. They shall regret this. I stop by the agency for the employment. They're in the plot."

And he did stop at the agency. But only his gold-braided clothes were seriously injured.

LIMIT THE ALIEN INFLUX,

Says Dr. Peters—Talks About Evils of Immigration.

The first of a series of men's meetings for the discussion of public questions was held yesterday afternoon in the Harlem Opera House by the Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters of the Church of the Epiphany. The meetings are to be every Sunday afternoon.

The Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur of Calvary Baptist Church was ill and unable to address the meeting. In his opening remarks on the question "How Long Can the United States Stand One Million Immigrants a Year Such as They Are?" Dr. Peters said:

"I think I express the conservative opinion of thoughtful Americans, whether native or naturalized, when I say that we have now reached a period in our history when immigration without limit is not advantageous to the welfare of either the immigrants or the country. Those who came in times past came because they had a republican sentiment. They were Americans before they landed and remained Americans until they were laid in American graves. Far too many of those who are now turning their faces hitherward are leaving their country for their country's good.

"The Governments of Europe, acting in the strongest self-interest, are allowing criminals their freedom on the condition of their emigration to the United States. There is no difficulty in accounting for the large increase of crime in America and its corresponding decrease in Europe.

"Of the total immigration of 1,000,000 during the past year fully 75 per cent. came from Southern Italy, Russia, Austria, and Hungary, the most unfavorable recruiting grounds under the sun for American citizens. From the countries akin to us in language, blood, and education, Great Britain, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands, Switzerland, and France, our present immigration is less than 20 per cent. of the whole. About 75 per cent. of our immigration to-day settles in Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. These immigrants do not go to the vast areas of our unoccupied territory, but settle down in the congested centres of our cities."

FIRE DRIVES OUT HUNDREDS.

Tenements Endangered by a Fire on the Bowery This Morning.

Three alarms were turned in early this morning for a fire in the four-story building in the rear of 25 Bowery, occupied by the paper box factory of Ikosky & Jacobs, and a sweatshop. At that hour it was thought that the building would be wrecked. The firemen thought everybody got out safe.

In front of the building is the Senate Lodging House, the tenants of which were driven to the street. The tenement houses in Bayard Street, from No. 23 to 25 and several in Division Street were emptied.

The cars, both elevated and surface, on the Bowery were held up.

"BEAUTY" SHOW REHEARSES.

Incidental Instruction How to Express Emotion—Comstock Not There.

The class of female physical culturists who have been chosen to represent New York in Bernarr MacFadden's coming exhibition in Madison Square Garden had a final rehearsal in the concert hall there last night—reporters invited. There were thirteen of the women, of ages ranging from, perhaps 14 to possibly 37.

No doubt it is difficult to pose "classically" in a suit of union underwear, a sash, a smile, and bath slippers, and this may explain some of the weird effects that the class developed. They had other handicaps, however. Here is one of the instructions given to the candidates:

"To express surprise, throw your weight on your right foot, drag your left foot behind you, hold your right arm high in front of your face, your left arm behind you, and then look under your right hand."

It was remarked by one of the persons who heard this that the poseuse who would not look surprised on seeing herself in this posture was incapable of emotion and should give up posing.

ODELL'S APPLE TREE.

The First Poetical Bud to Burst in The McManus's Campaign.

The campaign poet got busy on Saturday over in The McManus's district. At a meeting of the Lobster Club, presided over by Alderman Fred Richter, one of the members sang a new apple tree song, which he composed after Alderman Richter had told the Lobsters that he had it on good authority that the Platt Republicans would cut any ticket Odell named. Here it is, the first campaign song of this year:

In the shade of Odell's apple tree
Sat a man with a slate on his knee.
He figured his crop
So he'd come out on top;
A happy old farmer was he.

Some city boys came to the gate
Of the orchard and found they were late;
They were far from their homes,
So they all picked up stones
And declared they would smash Odell's slate.

In the shade of Odell's apple tree
Sneaked Woodruff and Dady and me;
Just a-waiting like Japs
For what might fall in our laps,
As Odell owned the orchard, you see.

He picked up an old rusty gun
And made all us city boys run;
We thought it immense
When we broke down his fence,
But later he had all the fun.

In the shade of Odell's apple tree
Now we'll bury the poor G. O. P.,
For we all are with Platt,
Who won't take off his hat
To Farmer Odell's nominee.

The orchard will stop giving fruit,
As the help of Odell doesn't suit;
For the old apple tree,
Like the poor G. O. P.,
Is a-with'ring away at its root.

After the meeting Alderman Richter said that The McManus intended to turn out a campaign poem every day from now until election day, and that if he fell short of ideas he, the Alderman, would help out with some original Aldermanic poetry like this, just to help the campaign along.

$80,265 IN PLEDGES.

But Little Jewelry Follows Mr. Simpson's Appeal for the Heathen.

The Rev. A. B. Simpson collected $80,265 in pledges at the Gospel Tabernacle, at Forty-fourth Street and Eighth Avenue, yesterday after another morning sermon on the joys of giving. Sophia Lichtenfeltz was there again, and, as in other years, jumped up and said, "Here's $15; the Lord will give you more." The string orchestra played appropriate music. Every verse was appropriate. Mrs. May Agnew Stevens, the leader, wrote most of the songs herself.

Yesterday's collection broke no record. It was a little larger than last year's, but at one of these meetings several years ago the collection, after one of Dr. Simpson's appeals for the conversion of the heathen, jumped to $112,000. This amount was later reduced when it turned out that some bonds which were given were worthless.

At one of the earliest of these donation meetings men and women, wrought up to a high pitch of religious enthusiasm, threw gold-headed canes, watches, and jewelry upon the platform at Mr. Simpson's feet. Yesterday just one watch and one wedding ring were put into one of the baskets. In one respect yesterday's collection was slightly unusual. It was in the large bulk of individual pledges, one man pledging himself to give $10,000, and about seven others pledged themselves to give from $7,000 to $3,000. Mr. Simpson is asked each year if these pledges are paid. He was asked again yesterday. His answer was:

"They are not only paid, but additional money is sent us."

The $80,000 in pledges was raised in two meetings. After Dr. Simpson's morning sermon $66,360 was raised.

At the afternoon meeting the congregation heard about conditions in the Congo from I. Wickware, Christian and Missionary Alliance's missionary there. He told in detail of atrocities of the soldiers in the Congo against the natives. After he had finished his recital of atrocities gifts for various purposes were freely given. Mr. Simpson stopped reading pledge cards seemingly because his strength had given out. Some one suggested that the pledge giving be continued at the night meeting, but he refused. He said afterward that he wanted to get away to his home at Nyack. After Mr. Wickware's address several young men promised to go to the Congo as missionaries.

JOHN M. LANDER DEAD.

Famous Band Leader Was Known to Many Society Folk.

John M. Lander, leader of Lander's Band and Lander's Orchestra, died on Saturday evening at his home, 223 East Seventeenth Street. He was 65 years old, and was perhaps known to more men and women of social prominence in and about New York than any other musical director since the days of Helmsmueller. His work for years at the leading Eastern race tracks and at social gatherings in New York and Saratoga brought him in close touch with society folk.

He was a close friend of the late Ward McAllister, and when Mr. McAllister died asked the privilege of furnishing the music at the funeral. The request was granted. He supplied the music at the balls and parties of many of the members of the older families, including the Astors, Sloanes, and Vanderbilts. For almost a year the pulmonary trouble which finally caused his death had prevented him from taking actual leadership of his musicians.

Mr. Lander was a native of New York, and began his career as the leader of Lander's Orchestra in 1865, succeeding F. B. Helmsmueller, at that time the bandmaster of the Seventh Regiment. He was a pianist of note and distinguished himself as a composer. He first appeared in public when he was thirteen years old.

The Lander band and orchestra will be continued under the leadership of Ed Walther.

YOU MUST REGISTER TO VOTE.

To-day and to-morrow will be the first days of registration. The polls will be open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. You can find the list of registration places in The Times to-day.

OLD SEEK IN CHURCH A FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH

Calvary Methodist Pews Filled with the Aged Yesterday.

MANY GO THERE IN AUTOS

One Woman 95 Years Young at the Service—Dr. Goodell's Antidote for Age Is Cheerfulness.

An invitation sent out by the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell to old folks to hear "An Antidote for Old Age" in his sermon in Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, Seventh Avenue and 129th Street, yesterday morning was cordially accepted. It brought out probably the greatest number of aged persons that ever attended any service in this city. The bright October morning helped out a little, and carriages and automobiles which the church supplied helped out a great deal more.

From the actual evidence at hand it appeared that aged women were the most anxious to hear Dr. Goodell's receipt for growing young again, for old men were rather scarce. The old women came in great bevies, their faces shining as brightly as their black shiny frocks, which looked spick and span, obviously more because they had been well kept than because they were new.

As early as 10 o'clock these smiling old ladies began to arrive. Those who came in automobiles had a startled and half-frightened look as they heard the chug of the machine. The young ushers had a time of it getting them out of the machines, and gave sighs of relief when they had safely piloted their charges up the stone steps of the church and into the pews. A pleasant-faced woman held them up in the vestibule. She had a small corsage bouquet for each. This well-meaning person soon met an opposition to her work that she evidently had not counted on. While there was the faintest glimmer of a twinkle in the faded eyes that looked at her, she was very often balked in her design to pin one of her bouquets on a newly arrived worshipper with such a question as this:

"Is this a tribute to my age? If it is I do not want it."

It didn't take long for the flower distributor to "catch on," and thereafter when she stopped a new-comer she invariably explained:

"As a tribute to your youthful appearance."

Then of course the bouquet was accepted.

There were at least 200 who had passed the proverbial threescore years and ten allotment among the old women. There were about ten who had reached ninety. The honors of the day, however, went to Mrs. A. Angevina of 275 West 132d Street. She confessed, with a slight shake of her head, that she was "95 years young." She came in a great brown automobile, which seemed to interest her immensely. Old as she is she is young in Calvary Church, for she joined the church only one week ago, coming in with several of her children and grandchildren.

An interesting bevy came from the Home for the Old at Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety-second Street. Significant as it seemed there were just thirteen of them in the first lot. When this fact was spoken of to the man in charge of them from the institution he remarked:

"They wouldn't mind that a bit. They seemed chipper and happy, but don't seem to be afraid to die. They drop out silently almost every day."

The antidote which the Rev. Dr. Goodell had to give them was no scientific or unusual antidote after all. In fact, it is difficult to imagine that the well-meaning pastor of Calvary escaped creating the suspicion in the minds of his aged worshippers that he had worked a trick on them to get them to church. His sermon was largely based on the idea that old age had its joys as well as youth. His antidote for old age was largely along the line of prolonging life through happiness and cheerfulness. This, he said, was possible through dwelling on the pleasant memories of the past, the joys of the present which meant to most of those present the love not only of children but also of grandchildren, and the hope of the future—"that future which is so near to you that many of you see it now as through a thin veil," he explained. "Why, you can almost see the faces of those you know and loved behind it; you can almost hear their voices."

A choir concealed in the balcony sang "Home, Sweet Home," very effectively. When the service was over all the younger persons who had got into the old folks' service stood at the door and watched the old women being led out of the church and into the carriages and automobiles again.

ROOSEVELT BIRTHDAY DINNER.

To Be Given in the Room Where He Was Born 47 Years Ago.

A banquet in honor of the President will be given by the Roosevelt Home Club on his forty-seventh birthday, Oct. 27, in the room in which he was born, at 28 East Twentieth Street. The President has been invited to be present.

The club now numbers about 300 members, and applications are being received daily from all parts of the country. It was organized on Oct. 12, 1904, by twenty-five admirers of the President. The officers are: President—L. P. Glasel; Vice President—George B. Swayne; Second Vice President—William M. Chadbourne; Third Vice President—Gen. James R. O'Beirne; Fourth Vice President—R. W. Mansfield; Treasurer—Emile Baker; Financial Secretary—William H. Hay; Corresponding Secretary—F. C. Smith; Recording Secretary—Louis Richter; Historian—Arthur Fuller.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—The West Indian disturbance has evidently changed its course somewhat more to the northward, as was indicated on Saturday night, and was this afternoon approaching the island of Bermuda, where a northeast gale prevailed with rapidly falling pressure.

Evidences of a disturbance in the West Gulf of Mexico were observed Sunday morning, and storm warnings were at once ordered. To-night the storm centre is evidently approaching the Louisiana coast, from which section some high winds have already been reported.

The winds along the New England Coast will be fresh southwest, except brisk on the southeast coast; on the Middle Atlantic Coast light to fresh, south to southwest, becoming variable; on the South Atlantic Coast fresh, possibly brisk northeast; on the East Gulf Coast fresh northeast, except brisk to high in west portion; on the West Gulf Coast brisk to high northeast to north; on the lower lakes light to fresh south to southwest; on the upper lakes fresh southwest, shifting to west and northwest by Monday night and increasing.

Steamships departing on Monday for European ports will have fresh to brisk southwest to west winds, increasing north of the fortieth parallel, with unsettled, rainy weather.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TUESDAY.

East Pennsylvania, Eastern New York—Fair and warmer Monday; Tuesday fair; light to fresh southwest winds, becoming variable.

Western New York—Fair Monday and Tuesday; fresh winds, mostly southwest.

Delaware, New Jersey—Fair and slightly warmer Monday; Tuesday fair; light to fresh south winds, becoming variable.

New England—Fair Monday and Tuesday; fresh southwest to west winds.

Western Pennsylvania—Fair Monday; Tuesday partly cloudy; variable winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

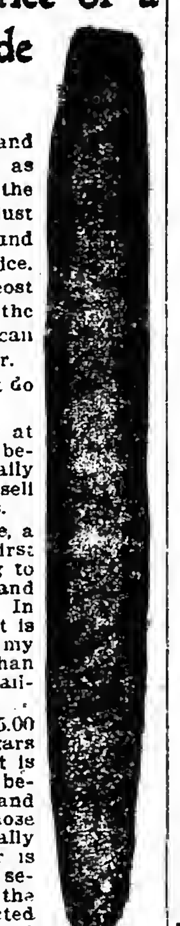
The retail price of a cigar is made up of what?



Cost of the goods and cost of selling. So long as there is cost of selling, the consumer must pay it—just as he pays duties and taxes—hidden in the price. If you can cut off the cost of selling and pay only the cost of the goods, you can buy your cigars cheaper.

But the retailer cannot do it for you. I can.

I sell you my cigars at about half retail prices because I cut off practically all the selling cost, and sell at the cost of the goods.

It costs me, to be sure, a little to sell a man his first hundred cigars—nothing to sell him the second and succeeding hundreds. In the average, selling cost is a minute percentage on my business—it is more than 50 per cent. of the retailers' prices.

Shivers' Panatela at $5.00 per 100 is equal to cigars retailed at 10c. each. It is the ideal business and between-times smoke, and good at all times for those who never want a really heavy cigar. The filler is all clean, long, clear selected Havana and the wrapper genuine selected Sumatra. Strictly hand made. Full 5 in. long.

Shivers' Panatela
Exact Size and Shape

MY OFFER IS: I will, upon request, send one hundred Shivers' Panatela Cigars on approval to a reader of The Times, express prepaid. He may smoke ten cigars and return the remaining ninety at my expense if he is not pleased with them; if he is pleased, and keeps them, he agrees to remit the price, $5.00, within ten days.

Enclose business card or give personal references, and state whether mild, medium or strong cigars are wanted.

ALL NEW YORK MAY SEE PRINCE LOUIS'S SHIPS

British Cruiser Squadron to Anchor in the Hudson.

ADMIRAL EVANS'S PLANS

American and Visiting Vessels to Form a Line from Grant's Tomb to Forty-second Street.

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, commander in chief of the North Atlantic Fleet, the battleship and the armored cruiser squadrons, which have been designated by the Navy Department to welcome the British cruiser squadron, under Rear Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg, on its arrival in this country, the first of next month, has had some trouble in arranging for an anchorage in New York waters for Prince Louis's ships. Edmiral Evans's own squadron is at present anchored in the Hudson, the great ships extending in a line that reaches from Forty-second to Seventy-ninth Street, and he had intended to again utilize the same anchorage when his squadron returns to New York after welcoming the British fleet at Annapolis.

The plan contemplated by the Admiral was for the British fleet to anchor to the south of his own, in a line that would extend from about Forty-second Street south to a point off Thirty-fourth or Thirty-third Street. In this latter arrangement, however, it appears that an obstacle was met in the regulations of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The other day Admiral Evans asked Capt. Newcomb of the Revenue Cutter Service to clear that space for the accommodation of Prince Louis's cruisers. Capt. Newcomb could only reply that the space in question was for the merchant marine and that the humblest craft that floats on the water had just as much right there as any of the battleships. Admiral Evans then decided to give the space now occupied by his own squadron to the British ships, and will himself take up an anchorage further up the river.

The result is that instead of a line of cruisers and battleships extending from Thirty-fourth to about Eightieth Street the line will be from a point off Forty-second Street to Grant's Tomb. The vessels that will form this magnificent line will be the armored cruisers Drake, Essex, Berwick, and Cornwall, under Prince Louis of Battenberg, and the battleships Maine, Missouri, Alabama, Illinois, Kentucky, Kearsarge, Iowa, and Massachusetts, and perhaps the armored cruisers West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Colorado, and the new protected cruiser Charleston, under Admiral Evans, the American vessels, with the exception of the Charleston, constituting the battleship and armored cruiser squadrons of the North Atlantic Fleet.

Admiral Evans's battleships probably will leave New York early next week for Hampton Roads, where they will be joined later by the cruisers under Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson, and from which point the ships will proceed off Cape Henry about Oct. 31 to meet and escort the British fleet to Annapolis, where the combined American squadrons will welcome them. The British squadron will arrive in Annapolis Nov. 1, where elaborate plans have been made for their entertainment. While the ships are in the Severn Prince Louis and his staff and the American Admirals and their staffs will go to Washington to be presented to and to dine with President Roosevelt. The ships will arrive in New York on Nov. 9, and will remain until Nov. 17.

Of the British cruisers it may be mentioned that to a certain extent they resemble our own armored cruisers. The Drake, which is Prince Louis's flagship, like the new West Virginia class, has four funnels, and is of about the same tonnage. The Drake is of 14,100 tons displacement, is 500 feet long, and can make twenty-three knots when pushed. She cost about $5,000,000, and was built at Pembroke, England, in 1901-3. Her armament consists of two 9.2-inch guns and a broadside of sixteen six-inch guns, eight to a side.

The other ships, the Essex, Berwick, and Cornwall, are sister ships of 9,800 tons displacement, and cost about $4,000,000 each. Their fore and aft turret guns, as well as their broadside, consist of six-inch guns. Their speed is about twenty-three knots. Like the first of the American armored cruisers, the Brooklyn and the New York, they are each three-funneled craft.

Cincinnati Makes Good Finish by Defeating Pittsburg Two Games.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 8.—Cincinnati won two games from Pittsburg this afternoon, darkness ending the second contest in the eighth inning. The first was marked by several extraordinary performances, of which a triple play by the locals, when the bases were full in the seventh, aroused the greatest enthusiasm. Overall gave four bases on balls in succession, pitching fourteen balls without a strike, when the triple was started on a fly to Seymour, subsequent outs being at the plate and at second base. Leach and Huggins made sensational one-hand catches. Brain was sent to the bench in the ninth inning for kicking. Cincinnati won the second game through superior hitting. Scores:

TWO GAMES FOR CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—The season closed to-day with a double-header with St. Louis, the locals winning both games on better work by their pitchers and cleaner fielding. The first game went twelve innings, and was won on an error, a sacrifice, and Slagle's third hit. A base on balls, a steal, and two singles tied up the lead St. Louis made in the third inning of the second game on three hits and Slagle's muff. Two passes and Brown's home run scored Chicago's other three. Scores:

ATHLETICS BEATEN 8 TO 5.

Seven of Connie Mack's Men Play a Benefit Game in Brooklyn.

Six of the Philadelphia Athletics, who have just won the championship of the American League and are eligible to participate in the world's series with the New York Nationals this week, in addition to their recent pitching recruit, Dygert, and Mertes, who played under the name of Gallagher, and Grant, a South Brooklyn man, played a picked team under the auspices of St. John's Catholic Club of Brooklyn, and as a testimonial to Tom Daly, the old second baseman of the Brooklyn Club and last year's manager of the Providence team of the Eastern League, at Washington Park yesterday. No initiation fee was charged, but every person upon entering the park was reminded of the presence of a contribution box. The attraction served to bring out a crowd of about 3,500 persons, and as only a few failed to contribute, a snug sum must have been realized for the veteran player.

Of the picked team the best known were "Sammy" Strang of the New York Nationals, who played under the name of Green; Sheckard and Pitcher McIntyre of the Brooklyns, and Tom Daly himself. Tom Burns officiated as umpire. Few of the players seemed to overexert themselves, particularly Waddell, who was very careful about handling and throwing balls at right field. The Crosses and Harry Davis played well, and so did Daly, while Dygert during the latter part of the game simply tossed the balls to batsmen.

N. Y. AMERICANS DEFEATED.

Lost Again on Sunday, This Time to the Ridgewoods.

For the second Sunday in succession the Greater New York team of the American League was beaten yesterday, this time by the semi-professional Ridgewoods at Ridgewood Park, the score being 12 to 8. There have been numerous large Sunday crowds at Ridgewood this year, but none nearly so large as that of yesterday, the estimated attendance being 12,500. Puttmann, the left-hander; Griffith and Linderman, who played with the Jersey City team this year, were the opposing pitchers. Both of the New York men were hit freely, while Linderman, barring the second inning, was quite effective.

The fielding of both teams was ragged, but the batting was of the liveliest kind. The features of the game were the batting of O'Brien, who made a single, a double, and a home run, and a double play by Rheinacker, unassisted.

Benefit to the "Giants" Well Attended

The benefit tendered to the champion New York baseball team in recognition of its second successive victory in the race for the National League pennant was attended by an enthusiastic gathering of dyed-in-the-wool "fans" last evening. It was held at the Majestic Theatre and was participated in by a long list of players, most of them ardent supporters of Manager McGraw's team.

Louis Mann and Nat Wills were especially well received, Wills's topical song "John McG." calling forth a whirlwind of applause. Helen Bertram, late of "Sergeant Kitty," recited a baseball poem on the "Pennant Winners" that pleased the enthusiasts highly, while most of the numbers of the extensive programme were appreciated. All of the Giants attended. They leave early this morning for Philadelphia.

OARSMEN WILL GO TO LAW.

Harlem River Clubs to Restrain New York Central Railroad.

A vigorous fight is in prospect between the boat clubs located on the east side of the Harlem River and the New York Central Railroad. The company proposes to lay tracks within three feet of the Metropolitan Boat Clubhouse, while the other five clubs adjoining will suffer the loss of property in front of the clubhouses. The railroad plans call for a four-track roadbed on the main line, which passes directly behind the Nassau, Harlem, Metropolitan, Wyanoke, Crescent, and Bohemian houses. Instead of widening the bed on the east side of the tracks, the company has staked out the ground next to the clubhouses for the new tracks. If this is carried out the members of the Metropolitan, Wyanoke, and Crescent Clubs will be unable to reach their houses, as the railroad ties will extend within a few feet of the main entrances. The clubs are occupying their present locations on a twenty-five-year lease, and an application will be made for an injunction to restrain the railroad officials from building the tracks next to the houses.

A meeting was held yesterday at the Harlem Rowing Clubhouse for the purpose of ascertaining the rights of the boat clubs and the railroad. The members of the clubs affected by the railroad plans are indignant at what they contend is willful trespass on their property, and the clubs propose to unite in any action against the railroad company. John O. Regan of the Metropolitan Rowing Club was instructed to lay the matter before ex-Park Commissioner John Heustis to ascertain what standing the clubs have in law. Should it be found the leases of the clubs are a sufficient protection against the threatened encroachment, action will be taken at once against the company.

Noted Horses for Pimlico Stakes.

James B. Brady's noted colt Oiseau will probably carry top weight in the Pimlico Fall Serial Handicaps, for which J. F. Ryan, the Maryland Jockey Club's representative, is receiving many entries. There will be more high-class horses in the stakes at Baltimore next month than ever before. Such horses as Tongorder, Oiseau, Waterlight, Colonial Girl, Claude, Merry England, Sir Ralph, Master of Graft, Gamara, Pilen, Spring, Oxford, and Dolly Spanker are among the notable entries. A great number of steeplechasers also will be sent to Baltimore, where cross-country racing is in great favor, and the many events framed for jumpers are filling well.

YOU MUST REGISTER TO VOTE.

To-day and to-morrow will be the first days of registration. The polls will be open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. You can find the list of registration places in The Times to-day.

AUTO RACING COURSE HAS FEW BAD PLACES

Dangerous Railroad Crossing Will Be Remedied This Week.

SZISZ EXPECTS HIGH SPEED

Chairman Morrell and Asa Goddard to Make Inspection of Roads—Big Jump for Christie Car.

A tour of inspection over the Vanderbilt Cup course will be made to-day by Chairman Robert Lee Morrell of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association, accompanied by Asa Goddard of Worcester, Mass., who is acknowledged as a road expert. Mr. Goddard is one of the Directors of the American Automobile Association, and lent valuable assistance to the committee in its early efforts to improve the twenty-eight-mile racing route. During the elimination contest Mr. Goddard stood guard at the Mineola railroad crossing on the Jericho Turnpike, a short distance from the Mineola station. A large crowd of curious spectators, looking for automobile troubles, thronged about the spot, and Mr. Goddard's flagmen were kept busy in maintaining a clear road for the racing cars.

As the cars approach the track, running down the Jericho Turnpike at the highest possible rate of speed, they meet a slight rise as they strike the track crossing, and the result is thrilling if not absolutely perilous. Walter Christie's car, for instance, took the crossing once without slackening speed, and it made such a leap in the air that Mr. Goddard will vouch for the truth of his statement when he says that the car leaped fully three feet before the wheels came down on the road on the other side of the tracks. All of the racers admitted that this crossing was one of the most dangerous places on the route, and there was a tendency to reduce speed a trifle.

Since the foreign drivers have been practicing over the course complaints have come to the committee regarding the danger of this spot, and also of another spot where the conditions are very similar on the North Hempstead Road, between the Bull's Head turn and East Norwich. Here a culvert is crossed at the foot of a gradually sloping declivity in the road, down which the racing cars go at full speed. The impact is something that no one but an experienced chauffeur would care to experience. Walter C. White, who has gone over the culvert many times at a good rate of speed with his White steam car, says that as the car leaps in the air it is enough to take a man's breath away.

Mr. White has also called the attention of the committee to another bad place about two miles below the Bull's Head turn on the Guinea Road. A cross road is encountered here which has been macadamized, and the roadbed is elevated slightly above the Vanderbilt race road. To the casual driver the elevation would cause no remark, but to a 120 racing car it is a different story. In taking these bad places, which cause the machine to fly in the air and come down several feet distant with a thud, requires a steady, firm hold on the wheel, for the slightest deviation from the true course may mean serious trouble for the car.

The French racer Szisz, whose eighty-horse-power Renault has made a very favorable impression upon those who have watched the recent trials, says of the route:

"The course is an extremely fast one, and I believe the winner will average between twenty-six and twenty-seven minutes for each of the ten circuits comprising the race. There are one or two spots which will necessitate very careful driving; I do not refer to the turns, but between the dangerous S curve and Albertson's the road for a considerable distance has been filled with loose dirt, and has neither been oiled nor rolled, and as a consequence it is impossible to maintain high speed and at the same time keep the car on the track at this point. For about five out of the twenty-eight and one-half miles comprising the circuit, it is impossible for the cars to pass one another, but then, too, the course has advantages, inasmuch as in some sections a speed of 100 miles an hour can be maintained for quite a distance with safety."

BRITT-NELSON FIGHT.

Successful Private Exhibition of the Moving Pictures of Contest.

A private exhibition of the moving pictures of the recent Battling Nelson-Jimmy Britt fistic battle in California was witnessed last night at the New York Theatre Roof Garden by several hundred persons. With one or two exceptions the reproduction of the fight was smooth and regular. Five rolls of films were used to cover the eighteen rounds, and Charles J. Harvey filled the position of lecturer. The photographs are remarkably clear and accurate. The actions of the pugilists, the blows delivered, and the movements of the spectators are shown with lifelike precision. The failure of the photographer to secure the right focus somewhat marred the performance, as the two men are hid from view when the blow which ended the fight landed on Britt's jaw. The two men are seen to come to a clinch, and a few seconds later Nelson emerges from the corner of the picture and Britt is seen lying prone on the floor. Referee Graney steps in between the fighters, and Britt's frantic efforts to regain his feet are plainly seen. The exhibition will be opened to the public this evening.

BELMONT PARK RECORDS FEATURE OF THE YEAR

Horsemen Anticipate More Marks for Meeting's Close.

SEASON'S LAST BIG STAKES

Star Two-Year-Olds in the Champagne, to be Run Wednesday on the Seven-Furlong Course.

Of all the happenings of the turf year none has aroused more interest and comment from horsemen than the fast time which was a constant feature of the first week of Fall racing over the new Belmont Park track. Turfmen were prepared for fast galloping, as the work of horses there before the meeting opened pointed unmistakably to a vast improvement in the going, but it was more than any one expected that two world's records should be beaten and new track marks at every distance run established.

There is not a question, however, that the track is responsible for the record breaking, for the same horses that set new marks are the horses that have run throughout the year without being distinguished for remarkable speed, and it is a matter of fact that very few of the best racers of the season have run so far at Belmont Park. A single exception is Roseben, holder of the new world's record at six furlongs on a circular course, for Roseben has stood out all through the year as a truly remarkable weight-carrying sprinter, though nothing that he ever did before compared with his gallop over six furlongs with 147 pounds in 1:11 3-5, after having been in training steadily through last season and all this year. Bedouin's record for a mile and five-sixteenths was another startling performance, for in spite of the fact that the distance is an unusual one, Bedouin made a big cut in the former best time.

From the speed that the Belmont track has made possible, it would seem that the Westchester Racing Association has only to put on any of the odd-distance races to make new marks, for in running his mile and five-sixteenths, Bedouin's time was 2:10 3-5, or only a tenth of a second behind the world's record for a mile and 500 yards, which has stood for twenty-three years. Bedouin's race, over fifty yards greater than Bend Or's record performance of 1882, makes it certain that, while not being rated among the first-class horses, he could have beaten the old record far off in his winning race last Monday.

That the fast time of last week will be continued through the closing days of the meeting seems certain, if the weather holds good, but as the programme is arranged the distances over which world's records may be made are in the main fractional courses, with only a few races at an even mile, and these, except in one instance, for beaten horses or the selling class. Grapple ran his fastest mile of the year in a selling race, however, and so there is hope even for the selling affairs, while the best chance for a really sensational mile contest is in the condition race of Thursday.

The point had been raised in connection with the extraordinary time of Belmont Park races that there may have been error in measuring the distances, but all chance for dispute on that score was disposed of last week by the affidavits of the engineers who surveyed the course, though to furnish the last proof that the measurements are correct the engineers will resurvey the entire circular course to-day.

Aside from the attractive possibility of new world's record for the remainder of the meeting, this week will see the running of the last of the great and valuable stakes of the Eastern season, the big events of the week being the $8,000 Champagne Stakes, to be run Wednesday, and the $12,000 Champion Steeplechase, the $5,000 White Plains Handicap, six furlongs for two-year-olds, and the $5,000 Belmont Park Weight for Age Race, at two miles and a quarter, on Saturday, when the meeting will close. The Champagne Stakes will furnish something of a novelty, in that to get the full seven furlongs of the course straight, the start will be made at the head of the chute, and the finish line will be moved down to the old line of last Spring, where the officials will be placed temporarily. The Champagne gives the best promise of the Fall for a trial of merit among the star two-year-olds of the season, the eligible list including Burgomaster, counted as the best of his age; the Futurity winner, Ormondale, and the star filly of the season, Whimsical, while other noted horses that promise to add interest to the race are the $30,000 Oaklawn, Kuroki, the Great Trial winner, Security; the smart filly Perverse, and a number of other stake winners among the fifty-eight horses eligible.

Crescent City Jockey Club Stakes.

The Crescent City Jockey Club of New Orleans has announced a list of seventeen stakes, framed for the Winter meeting. Four stakes for two-year-olds in 1906, each with $1,000 added money, will close on Jan. 1 next, while all the other stakes will close on Nov. 20 of this year. The stakes opened are: Two for three-year-olds in 1906, including the Crescent City Derby, one mile and a furlong, with $5,000 added; two for two-year-olds in 1905, including the Preliminary Derby, with $1,500 added; five for all ages, and eight for three-year-olds and upward in 1906, the added money ranging from $1,000 to $1,500 in these stakes. A special Mardi Gras Stake will be announced in February.

NATHAN STRAUS'S MARE WINS.

Ida Highwood Too Fast for Rival on Harlem River Speedway.

Followers of trotting on the Speedway scented the prospect of a coming challenger for the honors of the famous drive yesterday when Ackley C. Schuyler's stout-hearted trotter Mona Wilkes sailed after Nathan Straus's trim champion Ida Highwood, and came near to winning from the great more. Sullivan, the trainer for Nathan Straus, brought Ida Highwood leisurely up the Speedway at an early hour, and her first brush was with Baron de Shay. The Baron made a game race of it, but Ida Highwood's mark of 2:00¼ was more than the good gelding could reach. Midway down the stretch the two horses appeared as if harnessed together, and it was not until the break of the Baron near the finish that Ida Highwood forged ahead and won by a scant length.

The first meeting of Mona Wilkes and Ida Highwood was a week ago, and upon the appearance of the little mare yesterday there were no preliminaries, but both owners sought the upper starting end of the stretch as if by mutual consent. The other drivers knew what was coming, and they slackened off a bit so as to give the two a fair field for their trials. The start of the first brush was perfect, both getting away on even terms. Gaited splendidly, Mona Wilkes slightly gained on the Straus mare, which was going with all the speed that she possessed. It was fine racing, and the horsemen keenly watched the two as they sped along. Near the finish Nathan Straus lifted his reins and coaxed just a little more out of the champion, getting to the finish in a flash ahead of the challenger.

It was some little time before the two were ready for the next brush, and then they again got away nicely. Mona Wilkes showed in front first, but Ida Highwood was going strongly and gamely, so that she closed up the gap without faltering, and as the two, head to head, got to the finish, Ida Highwood again won, this time by a finger's length.

Shortly after this brush Mona Wilkes took the measure of David B., 2:09¼, the veteran of many Grand Circuit battles.

Two of the Class A pacers, Dr. Madara, 2:08, and Cascade, the latter driven by E. J. La Place, had some lively brushing, in which Dr. Madara won two and Cascade finished in front the third time they came down.

Andrew Con's pacer, Alice Drake, 2:14¼, was one of the most frequent starters during the morning. Alone she beat George Bushman's Trixie, 2:20¼, and then won in a three-cornered pace with S. T. de Lee's Peter Sheldon, second, and Trixie, third. Later, when the stretch had been almost cleared of vehicles, five of the pacers got off in fine style together. They finished with Free Advice, 2:20¼, driven by James A. Murphy, first; Alice Darke, second; Isaac A. Hopper's Bessie Reid, third; Trixie, fourth; and Peter Sheldon in fifth place. This was one of the best races of the day.

PELHAM BAY COURSE COMMITTEES SELECTED

MANY CLUBS REPRESENTED

President Pilkington Outlined Plan for World's Greatest Regatta Course—Will Begin Work at Once.

The project to give New York oarsmen the finest regatta course in the world has received official recognition, and unless the plans of the promoters go astray Pelham Bay course will become an actual fact within a year. In response to the invitation of President Pilkington of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, a number of the Presidents and other officers of the Harlem River clubs attended the first meeting yesterday at the Metropolitan Rowing Club. The meeting was an enthusiastic one, the following oarsmen being present, besides Mr. Pilkington: J. Kimmelberg, Vice President Harlem Regatta Association; John O. Regan, Metropolitan Rowing Club; Richard Sturcke, Waverley Boat Club; John Nagle, Harlem Rowing Club; Joseph Carey, Union Boat Club; David Brown and J. J. F. Mulcahy, Atalanta Boat Club; V. O'Mahoney, Hudson Boat Club; Mark Davis, Harlem Rowing Club, and Charles Allison, W. Hart, and F. McKee, Friendship Boat Club.

President Pilkington called the meeting to order, and temporary officers were elected, Mr. Pilkington being the choice for President and J. Kimmelberg for Secretary. After inspecting the map of the proposed location, the club representatives requested Mr. Pilkington to outline his plans. The latter prefaced his remarks by saying that he was not wedded to the location for any personal reasons, but because it offered the best and, so far as he knew, the only facilities for a regatta course which would be the peer of all waterways in the world. He was willing to accept any other location if it presented equal facilities for oarsmen.

In outlining his plans, Mr. Pilkington said:

It must be apparent to every one here as well as to the general rowing fraternity that conditions on the Harlem River have made it well nigh impossible for oarsmen to enjoy their favorite sport. It has really become quite dangerous, and the time has arrived for local rowing clubs to adopt some means of perpetuating the sport. The proposed course at Pelham Bay offers every advantage and no disadvantages. It is located in an available and convenient district, and within two years it will be possible to reach the course in forty minutes from the City Hall.

"The course extending along the shore from the railroad bridge to Rodman's Point will be fully one and one-half miles in length and 600 feet wide at its narrowest point, and will have a uniform depth of 16 feet. It is proposed to build a dike the entire length of the course, making it absolutely still water. The roadway on the dike can be continued across the end of the mainland to Pelham Bay, where another dike can be constructed bringing the inclosed stretch of water to the New York Athletic Club headquarters at Travers Island. Access to this point can be made by boats by digging a six-foot canal from the extreme end of the lagoon adjoining the proposed course, bridging the city line road into Pelham Bay, and from this point tot Travers Island. If this plan is followed the water space for picnic parties, canoeists, and yachtsmen will be quadrupled over that suggested in the original plans. The cost of covering the marshes with water and driving out the mosquito pest would be insignificant and would not only beautify the park and surroundings, but enhance the value of property in the vicinity of the proposed course. There are 1,600 acres in Pelham Bay, all of which are under the direct control of the Park Commission Board. The dirt removed from the mud flats could be utilized to build the road to surround the entire waterway.

What would be of public benefit would be the driveway which would extend a distance of fifteen miles. The width of the dike would admit of double rows of automobiles and other vehicles, and enable persons to drive around the entire course. Unlike the Harlem River, no sewage would pollute the water owing to the property being under the control of the Park Commission Board. Under the proposed plan the general public would be the gainer, as the location surrounding the course is admirably arranged for spectators, half a million of whom could witness a regatta without any inconvenience, and every person would be able to obtain an unobstructed view. This in addition to providing an unrivaled location for the enjoyment of all aquatic sports.

It is not incumbent on any boat club to move its clubhouse. Those organizations which contemplate moving their present quarters could transfer their buildings to the banks of the course, where 500 clubhouses can be built. The clubs which prefer to remain for the present where they are located can do so without interfering with the plans of the projectors. I have received urgent requests for speedy action from the Harlem Rowing Association, Long Island Rowing Association, New York Bay Association, and several clubs in Staten Island and New Jersey, all of which are heartily in favor of the new [illegible]. An approximate cost of the whole project, including building dikes, dredging, and other necessary labor would be less than $150,000, and Park Commissioner Schrader and his [illegible] on the board are ready to lend th[illegible] in bringing about this desirable [illegible].

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

Very rarely does it happen that speculative sentiment in Wall Street becomes so nearly unanimous as it now is on one point, namely, that as soon as money becomes easy again we are going to have a big bull speculation in which the general public will participate. It is taken for granted that the public ultimately will find the spectacle of rising prices irresistible. Even those who have been out of sympathy with the market in the last six or eight weeks, believing that prices should go lower temporarily, are found agreeing with enthusiastic present-day bulls as to the feasibility of much higher prices later and a market eventually in which all records of the past will be broken. Nobody, in other words, is bearish for a pull. An operator who has not believed in the market since August, and who has caustically criticised the methods of those controlling it, was asked last week if he could conceive of conditions arising in the near future which would turn him to the bear side for good. He answered unhesitatingly that he could not. "I am distrustful of the technical position of the market for the time being," he said, "but I have no fear whatever of the ultimate outcome. I believe that we shall have the biggest speculation in the next twelve or eighteen months that Wall Street has ever seen."

Obviously it is this great and abiding confidence in the future of the market which influences those who are carrying large lines of speculative stocks to hold so obstinately to their positions. It is due to their unwillingness to part with stocks, even temporarily, that there is no selling pressure upon the market.

Between those who already are heavily committed to the long side of high-priced stocks and others who wish to see speculation curtailed for a time and then resume in low-priced stocks, there is, however, one important difference of opinion. The bull interests now supporting the market believe that 6 per cent. money is but a temporary condition, while the more conservative element is convinced that money is going to rule between 5 and 7 per cent. at least for the rest of this year, and probably for a longer period of time. The disadvantage of financing with 6 per cent. money speculative commitments in high-priced stocks which on their prices yield less than 4 per cent. is apparent. Bull speculation has been running largely to such high-priced stocks, and it is in them that the bull account is most extended. This account, it is perhaps well to remember, was created in a 2 per cent. money market.

Prior to the break in December of last year and again in April of this year conservative banking interests commented dubiously upon the fact that individual speculators, many of them being rich outsiders unknown by name to the people of Wall Street, were carrying immense lines of stock. On each of the two last breaks in the market it was the liquidation of these accounts that caused most of the trouble. There is reason to believe that stocks have again been accumulating in such hands. It is rumored that in one account of this character 60,000 shares of a single high-priced stock are now lodged. It is a stock that has had an unusual advance recently, and the market for it really is narrow. A line of 60,000 shares thrown upon the market suddenly might break it 10 points.

The chief danger in the present situation is that after several weeks of dullness, with easy money not then in sight, if some large speculator committed to the bull side of the market should become impatient and decide to sell out while he could, his example would be followed by another and then another, and that such pressure, coming upon a narrow market, might start a general and very urgent selling movement among those who now are sanguine to the point of being overconfident.

Prices are high. Nobody can dispute the assertion. They are at the highest average point that has ever been reached. It is the high-priced stocks that bring the average up. The low-priced stocks are still selling well below their high-record prices. Twenty leading railroad stocks, averaged by Dow, Jones & Co., sold last week at the highest point of record. With prices on this level, and with money already as high or higher than the bull party has expected it to be at any time this year, the stock market has become narrow and dull. Dullness coming in this manner, after a long bull swing in prices, is often an unhappy sign. One very influential division of banking sentiment is highly conservative concerning the immediate future of the stock market. The expressions of this sentiment have so far been unheeded by the majority of speculators, because the money has been all on the bull side of the market, and those who have been distrustful of the bull leadership have profited nothing by it.

The bull crowd remained nominally in control of the speculative situation last week, but the market, instead of gaining ground, lost a little. The wonder was that it held as it did, with call money lending on two days of the week as high as 8 per cent. Nearly all of the stocks in which there has recently been an active speculative interest closed last week at declines, as the following table will show:

	Net Decline for Last Week.		Net Decline for Last Week.

For its showing of strength the market was largely indebted to the prominence of so-called specialties, or issues which move at times independently of the general market. A list of such stocks and their advances make a singular contrast with the declines previously noticed in the more important issues.

HAN-KOW RAILWAY PAYMENT.

Chinese Government Lends $5,500,000 to Viceroy Chang-Chi-Tung.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 9.—Correspondents of The Morning Post at Shanghai and Hongkong say that the Chinese Government has loaned to Viceroy Chang-Chi-Tung $5,500,000 at 4½ per cent. for the final return to China of the Han-Kow—Canton Railway concession, the amount to be secured by the opium revenues of the Provinces of Hu-Pe and Hu-Nan and the City of Canton.

Of this amount, the correspondents say, $2,000,000 was paid to the Viceroy on Saturday, and the remaining $3,500,000 will be sent to New York.

Cotton Reporters Accused.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., Oct. 8.—A. S. Johnston, a cotton expert well known throughout the Southern States, has issued a statement on the cotton situation, in which he says the Government's report is, as before, full of errors and irregularities.

He asserts that the Government's agents figured on the acreage in many places by taking observations from railroad car windows.

AMERICANS TO BUILD DUTCH ELECTRIC ROAD

Holland-American Company Incorporated for the Work.

IT WILL TAP AMSTERDAM

After Leaving the North Sea, and Then Go to the German Frontier—High Speed Expected.

The Holland-American Construction Company, which was incorporated a few days ago under the laws of the State of New York and is backed by Westinghouse interests, has been brought into being with a view to the construction of the most extensive electric railway system ever projected by Americans in Continental Europe. The scheme provides first for the building of a railroad from the German frontier to the North Sea, covering 115 miles. Later on it is proposed to build several branches which will exceed the mileage of the main line. Four of the men interested in the project are now on their way to Europe.

The western terminus of the proposed line is Wykan Zee, on the shore of the North Sea, about three miles north of the west end of the Amsterdam Canal. The main line is to cross Holland in a southeast direction to Arnheim, about a dozen miles from the German frontier. From Wykan Zee it will run to Zaandam, and thence into Amsterdam, the principal city in Holland.

Continuing in approximately the same southerly direction, the main line will cross the canal that connects the Rhine with the Zuyder Zee to Utrecht. From Utrecht the road will cross the lower Rhine Valley to Rhenen, a small town some five miles north of the Rhine, where it will turn slightly north of due east to its terminus in Arnheim.

It is said that the system may be extended by the construction of branches so that ultimately the entire lines to be built by the Holland-American Company may aggregate some 250 miles. One of the branches, it is said, will probably extend from Utrecht to Rotterdam and northwesterly to The Hague. Another may parallel the North Sea-Rhine Canal between Utrecht and Gorinchem. A third may extend from Utrecht a little north of east to Amersfvort. From Arnheim the road may be extended to Zutphen, a city of about 40,000.

Wykan Zee, the proposed western terminus of the line to be first constructed, is not now in direct land communication with Amsterdam, but from Zaandam to Arnheim the road will practically parallel steam lines already in operation.

Both freight and passengers will be carried by the proposed road on its main line and branches. The ballasting of the lines will be in accordance with the best American practice, and the rails will be heavy to permit of high speed. The average speed to be maintained between towns is expected to exceed fifty miles an hour. The road will be constructed on a private right of way, as is necessary under the Dutch laws.

Some idea of the probable success of the road as a passenger carrier, its promoters say, may be gathered from a comparison of figures. In 1895—the latest figures that are available—the average passengers carried to every mile of railroad in the United States was 69,000 and about 420,000 per mile in Holland. In other words, there were between six and seven passengers carried over every mile on the Dutch railroads that year for every passenger carried a mile in America. The density of Holland's population accounts for this.

The Board of Directors of the Holland-American Company includes the names of four Westinghouse men—George C. Smith, Vice President of the Security Investment Company of Pittsburg, of which George Westinghouse is President; Walter D. Updegraff of the same concern, Newcomb Carlton, Fourth Vice President of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, who has charge of the financial end of the Westinghouse electric interests in New York, and Joseph H. Lukach, a Director and financial head of the British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Limited.

John F. Alden, at one time prominently connected with the American Bridge Company; J. George Kaelber, Charles H. Palmer, and John H. Beckley, who are also largely concerned in the new company, have sailed for Europe. On reaching the other side, they will be joined by Mr. Lukach, and the whole party will proceed to Holland to look over the carrying out of the enterprise, which will represent an expenditure not far short of $5,000,000.

INCREASED METAL EXPORTS.

More Than 42,000 Tons of Iron and Steel Cleared Here in August.

Records were broken in the August exports of various iron and steel material made through New York. Hitherto such shipments have been sent abroad principally through Philadelphia and Baltimore, but in August New York handled about two-thirds of the entire consignments made to various parts of the globe via Eastern seaboard points, or 42,117 tons out of a total of 58,764 tons of steel rails, billets, beams, blowers, wire, wirs nails, and pipe which left these shores.

The shipment embraced the largest single consignment that has ever left any American port. The different countries to which exports were made were Great Britain, Ireland, Australia, Mexico, Argentine Republic, Chile, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Italy, Central America, South Africa, Canada, China, Japan, Philippine Islands, Dutch East Indies, Ceylon, and Greece. In all, 27,443 tons of steel rails went forward, the Argentine Republic taking 13,306 tons. Cuba was a purchaser to the extent of 8,838 tons. Mexico, notwithstanding the recently inflicted additional tariff, took three lots, amounting to 3,450 tons, while Chile got 1,749 tons. The steel billets went principally to England.

The September exports of wire, wire nails, and pipe exceeded 14,000 tons. The wire shipments also amounted to 7,835 tons. Australia was the principal buyer, taking 4,728 tons. The September nail shipment amounted to 1,865 tons, which went mostly to England. More than 4,300 tons of pipe went abroad last month, 2,030 tons of which went to Europe.

Pursuant to the judgment in the above-entitled action, dated the 3d day of August, 1905, duly entered in the Clerk's office of said county, and for the purpose of closing the interests of certain estates in the properties mentioned below, I will offer at public auction on the 17th day of October, 1905, at 12 o'clock noon, at the New York Real Estate Exchange Salesroom, 14 and 16 Vesey Street, by Edward J. Roberts, auctioneer, the following-described properties located at Classon Point:

FIRST PARCEL.

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land, known and distinguished by the number (Twenty-two) XXII. on a certain map filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester on the 30th day of June, in the year 1868, designated as number (76) seventy-six, and entitled map of Classons Point, in the town of Westchester, designed by Ignatz Pilot, surveyed by Gust. Famback and William Livingston, May, 1868, and bounded and described as follows: On the southerly side by lot number twenty-four on said map, on the easterly side by the creek, on the northwesterly side by lot number twenty on said map, and on the southwesterly side by lot number twenty-three on said map, containing fifteen acres and sixty-seven-hundredths of an acre, and subject to the easement of so much of meadow drive as is included within said premises.

Being the same premises conveyed to Frederic R. Coudert, Charles Coudert, and Louis Leonce Coudert by K. T. Dyckman, referee, &c., by deed dated April 25th, 1878, recorded in the Register's office of Westchester County in Liber 949 of Deeds at Page 224.

SECOND PARCEL.

All that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land known and distinguished by the number thirty-three on a certain map filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester, on the thirtieth day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, designated as Number 76, and entitled "Map of Classon's Point, in the Town of Westchester, designed by Ignaz Pilot, surveyed by Gust. Fambeck and William G. Livingston, May, 1868," and bounded and described as follows: On the northeasterly side by the centre of the public road to the point on the southerly side by Long Island Sound, and on the westerly side by Lot No. XXXIV., on said map, containing two acres and thirty-two-hundredths of an acre, and subject to the easement of so much of said public road as is included in said premises, together with all the right, title, and interest of the owners in and to the land under water in front of and adjacent to said premises.

Being the same premises conveyed by Gerard M. Stevens, referee, to Frederic R. Coudert, Charles Coudert, Jr., and Louis Leonce Coudert by deed dated the 29th day of March, 1877, and recorded in the Register's office of Westchester County in Liber 929 of Deeds at Page 371.

The purchaser will be required at the time of sale to execute the usual memorandum of sale, and to pay ten per cent. of the purchase price, and the residue on the 15th day of November, 1905, when deed will be ready for delivery.

BURGLAR CONFESSES 400 HARLEM CALLS

Hall Went About His Work with a Cab and Liveried Driver.

CABBY WAS THE LOOK-OUT

Fashionably Clothed, Hall Would Drive Up to a House, Loot It, and Haul Away the Plunder.

In John Mulcaire, better known to the police as William Hall, the police say they have the man who has been responsible for nearly 400 burglaries committed in Harlem within the last two years. Mulcaire was arraigned in Harlem Court yesterday morning, together with two alleged accomplices, and two other men charged with receiving stolen goods. The former gave their names as Fred Martin and Stephen Haven. The men charged with receiving stolen goods were Benjamin Berkman, a jeweler of 637 Lexington Avenue, and Simon D. Levy, also a jeweler, of 62 East 116th Street. The five were held in $3,000 bail each.

The house of Horace Hord, at 333 Lenox Avenue, was robbed last Friday. The police were notified, and Detective Sergts Riley, Kear, and Callan started on a tour of the pawnshops in search of about $500 worth of silverware and cut glass stolen from the Hord house.

Riley saw Hall go into a pawnbroker's shop at 116th Street and Third Avenue with a bundle under his arm. He followed the man into the shop and found that the bundle contained a piece of cut glassware answering the description of one of the pieces stolen from the Hords. Hall was arrested and told the detective that two of his partners were waiting for him at 114th Street and Lexington Avenue. Riley and his prisoner started around that way, followed by Kear and Callan. At 114th Street and Lexington Avenue was a cab, the driver of which, as soon as he saw the detectives and Hall, began to lash his horse in an effort to escape. He was too slow, however, and Riley caught the horse by the bridle with one hand, holding to his prisoner with the other.

Kear and Callan arrested the driver and a man whom they found inside the cab. The men proved to be Martin and Haven.

Hall told the police that he had committed about 400 burglaries in the Harlem section in the last year and a half, and said he had sold much of the loot to Benjamin Berkman. The detectives visited Berkman's place and arrested him. Later Levy was arrested.

When arraigned before Magistrate Crane, Hall wore a neat and expensive gray suit, a light Fedora hat, and looked more like a successful broker than a burglar. When Detective Riley told Magistrate Crane that Hall had confessed to 400 burglaries the Magistrate looked at the prisoner in surprise.

"Is that true?" he demanded of Hall.

"Well, perhaps not quite so many as that," replied the prisoner. "Maybe ten or fifteen less."

"What difference does ten or fifteen make?" asked the Magistrate.

"Oh, well, let it go at that," retorted the prisoner, nonchalantly.

As the prisoners were led away from the court room a pretty young woman rushed to Hall and cried, "O Billy!"

"Go away," said Hall. The girl turned with tears streaming down her face.

Hall said he had committed so many burglaries that he could not begin to remember the addresses. A general alarm was sent to the Harlem stations asking the police to report the addresses and particulars of burglaries complained of lately so that the Headquarters men may have something to work on in recovering the stolen property.

Martin, the police say, came from Philadelphia, and is a driver by occupation. In the wholesale work of looting houses he had a job in which he could use his training. The three men did their work with the aid of a cab or a light runabout. Martin was the driver and wore livery. The others, dressed as business men, would drive boldly up to the place selected for their work. Martin would remain on the box outside, keeping his eye on the policemen in the street and keeping a general lookout. The other two would go into the houses. When the plunder was carried out it was hauled away in the cab.

The police say Hall is a brother of Charles Hall, who is now serving a three years' term in Sing Sing for robbing Thomas Lloyd and William Newman of 2,024 Lexington Avenue last Winter. The plunder, valued at $20,000, was almost all found in a storage warehouse in Harlem.

Miss Gertrude Barnum, National Secretary and Organizer of the Woman's Trades Union League, yesterday addressed the Central Federated Union in behalf of the striking collar starchers in Troy.

The friends of the most influential of the employers are trying to persuade him and the other employers to agree to arbitration. So far the strikers have received $20,000 in contributions from unions and other sources."

It was decided to assist the strikers financially. The women have been out of work five months.

INDEPENDENT 'PHONE COMPANIES MERGED

5,000 Lines United to Fight the Bell Company.

NEW PLANT FOR THIS CITY

With a Capacity of 225,000 Telephones —New Concern Also to Control a Manufacturing Company.

The organization was announced yesterday of the United States Independent Telephone Company, the purpose of which is to unite in connecting systems the various independent systems throughout the country. Thomas W. Finucane is the President of the new company, and among the Directors are Adolphus Busch, Walter B. Duffy, George Eastman, the President of the Eastman Kodak Company; August Gehner, President of the German-American Bank of St. Louis; Robert C. Hall of the independent telephone system of Pittsburg, William H. Page of this city, Hendrick S. Holden, President of the Commercial National Bank of Rochester, and Hiram W. Sibley.

Of the new company President Finucane said:

"In result we acquired and now own franchise rights in New York City which, in the opinion of our attorneys, are similar in scope and character to those of the Bell Telephone Company.

"These we propose to make the subject of the installation of a plant with a present capacity of 225,000 telephones and an ultimate capacity of 750,000 telephones for New York City and the tributary districts which environ it.

"Our auditing advisers will be Haskins & Sells of New York, and our corps of consulting engineers on work under franchises will include J. H. Ehrehart, who recently resigned as expert to the State Board of Tax Commissioners of New York State.

"Our company has authorized its collateral trust mortgage of $25,000,000, and the underlying securities will comprise a control of the Stromberg-Carlson Telephone Manufacturing Company, which manufactures a thousand telephones a day, and the New York Independent Company, which owns the franchise rights above referred to.

"The bonds will be 5 per cent. collateral thirty-year gold bonds. The trustee of the mortgage is the Security Trust Company of Rochester, N. Y. The coupons will be payable at its office, and also at the Chemical National Bank of New York City.

"This is only the initial step in the plans of development now in contemplation. The Directors of the New York Company will be announced later.

"The formation of the United States Independent Telephone Company is the first step in the movement to furnish telephone companies with standard apparatus and with a guarantee that their supply cannot be cut off through the absorption of manufacturing companies by the Bell interests; to knit together in connecting systems the independent telephone lines of the country, which, unappreciated as the fact may be in the East, to-day considerably outnumber the lines owned or controlled by the Bell Telephone Company; and to aid independent telephone companies in the installation of their plants and improvement of their service.

"There are to-day over 5,000 telephone companies in this country independent of the Bell systems. In response to the demand of these companies for product and appliances and for a centralized unity of action the United States Independent Telephone Company has been incorporated.

"The independent telephone lines represented directly or indirectly by or through one or another of our Directors, comprise systems which extend substantially from Kansas City, Mo., to New York."

ARTISTS, NOT WORKERS.

C. F. U. Doubts Whether Musicians Belong to the Working Class.

The delegates of the Mutual Musical Protective Union, who have been badgered for the last three or four weeks over reports that the lessee for the bar and cigar stand at the clubhouse which the union will open at Eighty-fourth Street and Third Avenue on Nov. 1, is suspected of non-unionism, became angry in the Central Federation meeting yesterday. A threat of suspension was made if the charges were true, whereupon Delegate Schwertl of the Musical Union got very angry and said:

"We are tired of this whole business. Every now and then there is some petty complaint from a union, and then there is the talk of suspension. That's all we get out of this body."

Delegate Gold of the Hebrew Actors' Union said that the musicians considered themselves artists anyway. "This should be investigated," he said. "If they are artists and don't belong to the working classes, this is no place for them."

"We are beginning to think so ourselves," said Schwertl.

"I don't believe this is any place for us."

"An investigating committee was instructed to come in next week with a final report on the bar lessee's standing as a union or non-union man.

HOTEL MANAGERS CALL ARRESTS AN OUTRAGE

To Hold a Meeting to Take Steps to Protect Themselves.

CAMBRIDGE COURT MAN FREE

The Other Cases Are Adjourned—Guests Complained to the Police, Capt. Gallagher Says.

Managers, hotel clerks, their attorneys, and representatives of the Hotel Men's Association gathered in large numbers in the West Side Court yesterday morning when the clerks of four well-known apartment hotels, arrested Saturday night, were arraigned on the charge of maintaining disorderly places. The men arraigned were Charles Buckley of the Cambridge Court, in West Forty-ninth Street; Manchester Pitman of the Gerard Hotel, in West Forty-fourth Street; Harry J. Willis of the Dunlay, in West Forty-fourth Street, and Henry S. Bicknell of the Hamilton, in West Forty-fifth Street.

All the prisoners asked for a postponement of their cases except Buckley, who was arraigned and discharged. The other cases were set down for to-day.

Detectives McGrath and Marx of Capt. Gallagher's staff were the complainants against Buckley. McGrath said that he met a woman in Forty-ninth Street and accompanied her to the hotel. Marx testified that he met the same woman later and also accompanied her to the hotel. Both detectives said that Buckley was the clerk who received them.

Buckley admitted that McGrath was a guest at the hotel, but said he had not seen Marx. Another clerk, Richard Lightfoot, testified that it was he who admitted Marx to the hotel.

"These detectives," the lawyer said, "registered for man and wife. They looked respectable, and our clerks did not think it necessary to demand a marriage license from them."

Magistrate Baker dismissed the complaint, saying that he did not think that the same clerk admitted the detectives.

The hotel proprietors will hold a meeting to-morrow afternoon at Mr. Dunlap's office, 75 Broadway, to consult with their attorneys as to what steps they shall take. R. W. Macurdy, manager of the Cambridge Court Hotel, said that under the law the clerks could not ask applicants for marriage certificates, and had to be governed by their own judgment.

"There has long been a rule among hotel men," said Mr. Macurdy, "to admit no couple without baggage, but this had to be abandoned in a city like New York, where there are so many respectable people who might miss a train to the suburbs after the theatre and decide to stay over night. Otherwise the parks might be filled with people who could not get lodgings. The affair was an outrage on the part of the police."

Commissioner McAdoo refused to discuss the action of Capt. Gallagher yesterday, saying that he did not know the details. He could not remember if any of the apartment houses descended upon by the police were on the "suspected" list. If a wrong had been done, it would be rectified, he said.

Capt. Gallagher said last night that the complaints on which his men acted came from residents of the hotels themselves. "And," said the Captain, "if I learn of any more cases of this kind I shall proceed in exactly the same way."

RAMSEY COUNSEL FLEE. WITHDRAWING HIS CA E

GOULD VICTORY AT ST. LOUIS

Judge Refuses to Enjoin His Voting Wabash Stock — Says Ramsey Is Not Guiltless.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Oct. 9.—The fight between Joseph Remsey, Jr., and George J. Gould for control of the Wabash Road, which will reach a test of strength at the annual meeting here to-morrow, had an unexpected turn in the Lucas County Court here to-day. On news of the adverse decision in St. Louis, Ramsey withdrew his applications for three inspectors of election to be named by the court.

Ramsey's counsel almost fled from the room, taking a list of 114 Ramsey supporters which they had brought into court this morning. The Gou i interests meds a bitter fight to have the names of the Ramsey supporters put on record, but the move of counsel blocked this, and Ramsey will go into the election to-morrow with his full strength still hidden.

At the Boody House to-night the Ramsey forces and those of George Gould both slept. The deposed President of the Wabash Road appears to believe that he has yet a chance to beat Gould at to-morrow's meeting. To-night he said:

"I have nothing to say regarding the developments of the day at either St. Louis or here. I am going into that meeting to-morrow and am going in to fight."

"Do you still expect to be re-elected President of the Wabash at to-morrow's meeting?" was asked.

"I have nothing to say further to-night," said Mr. Ramsey, as he started to bed.

The culminating scene in court came at 2:15 o'clock this afternoon after a short recess following a three-hour session in the morning. There had been times when it seemed that the famous counsel on either side might so for forget themselves as to come to blows. Ramsey had come into court professing to represent at least 10 per cent. of the $63,000,000 Wabash stock and debentur- bonds, and on the strength of the representation asked that the court appoint inspectors for the election.

Attorneys known throughout the country hurled accusations at each other across the room until on several different occasions Judge Kinkede was compelled to interfere. The court just before noon made a ruling that the Ramsey people would have to show the court that they were authorized to represent the 114 stockholders whose names were being referred to.

On the reconvening of court Judge John H. Doyle appeared for Ramsey alone, and to a packed but silent courtroom announced that, in the interval of recess, he and his clients had heard by wire of the decision in St. Louis that the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain stock could be voted. That being the case, he begged leave to withdraw the application which Ramsey had made for Inspectors of Election.

Attorney Alexander Smith of the Wabash interests in Ohio, was on his feet in an instant objecting to the case being dropped. Judge Kinkade ruled that it was the privilege of counsel at eny time in such cases to withdraw.

"Anyway, we have withdrawn our case, and that settles it," said Judge Doyle, as he started for the door with his papers.

This evening Clarence Brown, the personal counsel of Mr. Gould, made the following statement:

"Mr. Ramsey has not, nor has he had at any time, a foot to stand on. He not only did not represent the 114 stockholders, as he alleged to-day, but even had he proved that he represented them, their holdings would not aggregate the 10 per cent. of the entire stock as required in order to make a motion in court. It was a pitiful bluff all the way along. We are all only sorry for Mr. Ramsey."

The Gould interests to-day were represented by Mr. Brown, E. J. Marshall, and Alexander Smith, while the interests of Ramsey were looked after by Judge John D. Doyle and C. T. Lewis of Toledo and Col. A. J. Palmer of New York. Mr. Ramsey, though in Toledo, was not in court.

The Ramsey people opened by offering the list of 114 stockholders whom they professed to represent. The three Inspectors to whom they objected were F. J. Reynolds, son of Col. Reynolds, one of the Wabash Directors; A. W. Colton, manager of the Wabash Steamship Company, and C. H. Newton, local agent of the Wabash. There was a great craning of necks for the Ramsey faction's list, but counsel held it fast.

Attorney Brown opened by saying it was not proved that Judge Doyle was empowered to represent these stockholders, and as the legal representative of Gould he challenged the jurisdiction of the court to pass on the case at all.

"We raise the question as to whether you have any right here at all," shouted Judge Doyle with flushed face.

"I'll put my client on the stand. I want you to put your man on too," said Attorney Brown. "I understand Mr. Ramsey is in Toledo now, and why is he not here?"

Judge Kinkade asked: "What about the list of stockholders the Wabash Road was to furnish to-day—at least that it was understood they were to furnish?"

"That is the point, your Honor, that we try to make," said Attorney Brown. "We do not recognize Mr. Doyle end Mr. Ramsey as having the right to demand the list. In short, we do not be-

WIFE DROWNED, TWO ACCUSED

Woman's Parents Charge There Was a Conspiracy to Kill Her.

O. H. Duerr, 23 years old, of 182 East Seventy-eighth Street, and Charles Hahn, 23 years old, of the same address, were locked up in the High Bridge Police Station last night as suspicious persons. The complainants against them were Raymond Messmer and his wife, Mary, the parents of Duerr's wife, Kittie, who was drowned in the Harlem River yesterday afternoon while rowing with Hahn.

As soon as the Messmers heard of their daughter's death they went to the Coroner's office in the Bronx and requested the Coroner to take action against Hahn and their son-in-law. The Coroner said he could not do so until the body had been recovered.

The dead woman's parents then went to the police station and told Capt. Wendel that they wanted Hahn end Duerr arrested on the charge of conspiring to kill their daughter. Samuel Baudler, who lives in the same house with the Messmers, went along with them. All three told the police that Duerr, who had been married to their daughter for a year, had frequently threatened her, and that he and Hahn hed been much together of late.

Yesterday afternoon Joseph Lowere and Anthony Bamman were in a launch just below High Bridge when they saw a young man in a boat struggling with ons oar against the tide, which was running out. They took him in tow, and he told them thet his companion, Mrs. Kitty Duerr, 18 years old, had become frightened when the waves from a passing tug rocked their boat end had jumped into the river. He said he could not swim, and had tossed an oar to her, but she failed to grasp it. She senk, he said, and failed to reappear.

The launch steamed to Morris Heights, and the men in charge of her turned the young man over to the police. He was taken to the station house and questioned. He said he was Charles Hehn, a jeweler. He said he had been in the country only a few months and could nefther speak nor write English.

He wes not detained by the police at that time, but was rearrested later.

TRIED TO FIRE FLATHOUSE.

Neighbors Witnessed Incendiary's Attempt in Park Avenue Basement.

An attempt was made last evening to burn the five-story apartment house on the northwest corner of Park Avenue and Fifty-third Street, which is owned by the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company.

Mrs. Catherine Walker and her daughter Louise, who live at 101 East Fifty-third Street, which is diagonally across the street from the apartment house, were looking from a window of their apartment on the second floor at 8 o'clock, when they saw a man wearing a gray suit and a slouch het run quickly down the steps leading to the basement on the Park Avenue side of the house. He set fire to a handful of excelsior or straw with a match, tossed it into the basement, and ran up the avenue.

A flame flared up and Mrs. Walker ran out and notified Policeman Hughes of the East Fifty-first Street Station, who turned in an alarm.

The firemen made short work of the fire under the hescment steps, but the flames had spread to the timbers of the shoring at the edge of the excavation for the New York Central's yards, and this fire was not so quickly put out. The house stands at the edge of the excavation.

RAN A GANTLET OF FOES.

Delluvio Mortally Stabbed with Stiletto in an Indian-Like Dash.

Stefano Delluvio, a gigantic Italian, ren the gantlet of a double line of his countrymen lying in wait for him in East Sixty-third Street, on Saturdey night, and after nearly reaching his home received a stab wound from which he died in the Presbyterian Hospital yesterday afternoon. The physicians of the hospital staff said that Delluvio was the best specimen of physical manhood ever reccived as a patient at the hospital. He was six feet three inches tall, broad in proportion, and very handsome.

According to the police, Delluvio, who was forty-four years old, had a wife and family in Italy. It is supposed that his death was plotted by a rival for the affections of a young woman who lived in the same tenement with him at 334 East Sixty-third Street. Half a dozen Italian detectives are working on the case and are anxious to find a man only known to them as Felix. They think he may be able to throw some light on the murder.

Delluvio reached the block in which he lived at 10 o'clock Saturday night. As he neared his home he saw a score or more men lined up in a double row on the sidewalk. Nothing daunted, however, he started to pass between the lines.

The first man lunged out and struck Delluvio a stinging blow in the face with his fist. The man on the opposite side also struck him, but Delluvio caught the blow on his arm and struck out right and left as he made his way down the line.

As his assailants closed in upon him he tossed them aside with comparative ease, and had almost reached his own doorstep when a crouching figure slipped from the crowd and a stiletto flashed out. The blow reached Delluvio, and he fell to the sidewalk with a groan. His assailants scattered and quickly disappeared in the darkness.

In the meantime, a crowd of 1,000 persons gathered. The wounded man was carried into the home of Dominick Bozzefi, at 340 East Sixty-third Street. As soon as Delluvio's condition was learned an ambulance call was sent in to the Presbyterian Hospital, and Dr. Squires took him to the institution.

Detective Bonzer of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station was detailed to the case, and later other detectives were sent out.

The information relating to the probable cause of the attack wes furnished by John Rozzefi, a banker, of 330 East Sixty-third Street, who owns the house in which Delluvio lived.

EX-CONVICT DREW PAY IN DEAD MAN'S NAME

Joseph Ford Is Arrested for Impersonating Frank A. Sliney

ON TAX DEPARTMENT'S ROLL

He Has Served Sentences for Grand Larceny, Assault, and Manslaughter—Related to the Nagles.

An arrest likely to have far-reaching and startling results was made yesterday afternoon when County Detectives Reardon and Butler, after four days of waiting, took into custody a clerk in the Bureau of Assessments and Arrears of the Tax Department, who was known to his friends and his family as Joseph Ford, while on the city pay roll he appeared as Frank A. Slincy. A warrant for this man was issued last Wednesday by Magistrate Pool on a complaint made by President William F. Baker of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, charging him with larceny of $50. The affidavits drawn by Assistant District Attorney Vandiver in support of the complaint indicate that the $50 represents a month's salary drawn from the city treasury, and that Ford was able to draw it by an imposition so gross that it was made possible only by negligence on the part of those intrusted with the task of preventing this very kind of deception.

The state of affairs disclosed hy the exposure of Ford, as well as some hints dropped by President Baker, foreshadows a probable investigation of the Civil Service Department thet may change the personel in that branch of the City Government. It is also possible that, before the District Attorney finishes with the matter, persons well known may become involved.

An additional proof of official negligence is found in the fect that Ford, alias Sliney, is an ex-convict, who spent the greater part of the time between 1877 and 1900 in State prison, sent there for grand larceny, felonious assault, end manslaughter. The man, according to his own statement, is a near relative of Percival E., Garrett, and John T. Nagle.

Frank A. Sliney, the man whose name Ford has been using, wes a clerk in the employ of the clothing firm of Rogers, Peet & Co. He was also a cousin of Ford and of the Nagles. On Jan. 3, 1900, he applied to the Municipal Civil Service Commission for admission to examinations that would entitle him to a junior clerkship. At the time he made a statement in his own handwriting, according to the rules of the department, in which he gave his age as 28 years. He also gave three namee of men who had declared themselves willing to act as his "references." One of these names was that of Thomas Ford, a cousin. In due time he submitted himself to the examinations and was passed with a percentage of 80. He continued with Rogers, Peet & Co. till some time in 1904, when his health began to fell to such an extent that he hed to resign and move to Ozone Park, L. I. At that place he died on Dec. 20, 1904.

In October, 1903, Joseph Ford presented himself at the Civil Service Department in response to a call sent to Sliney, Mr. Vandiver alleges, and obtained temporary work as a substitute clerk. On Dec. 16, or four days before the death of his cousin Sliney, Ford obtained steady employment in the Bureau of Assessments and Arrears, of which Edward A. Slattery is the head, his title being that of junior clerk and his salary $600 a year. Later he was transferred to the Bronx branch of the bureau, and last Wednesday—the very day when the warrant was issued for him—his salary was raised to $1,200.

At the time Ford obtained his permanent place he had, in accordance with the civil service rules, to fill out a duplicate of the statement signed and sworn to by the applicant for civil service examination. In taking this final step Ford proceeded with audacious reckiessness. Not only did he make no attempt to disguise the handwriting, but he gave his correct age, which is 31, and he gave four references instead of three, including only one of the names used by the real Sliney. That name was Thomas Ford's. Uno of the new names used by Ford was that of Percival E. Nagle.

The duplicate statement is meant to prevent anyoody getting employment on the strength of the examinations passed by another man. The law requires a careful comparison of the two documents. The first glance at these particular documents would have been sufficient to expose the fraud that was being practiced. Possibly such a comparison was not made. Neither Mr. Baker nor Mr. Vandiver would say a word on this point yesterday.

From December last year till the beginning of last week Ford held his job and did his work and drew his pay as Frank A. Sliney without anybody either in the Civil Service Department or in the Tax Department seeming to suspect him. One day a man walked into the office of Assistant District Attorney Vandiver and told the true state of affairs. Mr. Vandiver communicated with Mr. Baker. The President of the Civil Service Commission set his subordinates working. Then, at last, the original statement of the real Sliney and the duplicate made out by Ford were compared.

"All I can say now," Mr. Baker remarked yesterday in regard to the discovery that followed that comparison, "is that tho greatest negligence must have been shown by somebody. Who is responsible it is impossible for me to tell now, but the matter will be followed up to the end."

When the warrant had been issued by Magistrate Pool it was given for service to County Detectives Reardon and Butler. Going to 750 East 170th Street, where the clerk had been living with his wife and five daughters under his right name of Ford, the detectives were told that the man had left there, and that he no longer lived with his family. Whon, after they had waited for him for four days, Ford came face to face with Reardon and Butler, he admitted everything charged against him. He said that whatever he had done had been done with the knowledge and assistance of Sliney.

In the meantime the detectives had used some of their spare time to look up the man's antecedents. They unearthed the fact, to begin with, that although Ford had been convicted three times of crimes he had never been photographed or placed on record in the Detective Bureau. His first arrest, as far as could be learned, took place in February, 1877, when five indictments for grand larceny were returned against him on evidence of Edward A. Richards, a real estate man, who had employed Ford as a collector, and who charged him with stealing about $1,000. He pleaded guilty, and was sent to the penitentiary for two years and six months. In March, 1882, he was sentenced to one year's imprisonment for shooting and seriously wounding Alexander Ford, supposed to be a relative. On Jan. 11, 1889, Ford was sent to State Prison for nearly nineteen years by the late Recorder Smyth for killing a woman named Nellie Barrie. He was released on May 21, 1900, seven years and eight months having been subtracted from his term on account of good behavior.

The detectives learned that at the time of Ford's first arrest numerous letters were written on his behalf to the Judge. Among the signers of those letters were Garrett Nagle, Miles B. Andrews, P. J. Hanbury, Keeper A. F. Young of the City Prison and former Register of Records John T. Nagle.

Ford was locked up at Police Headquarters last night. This morning he will be arraigned before Magistrate Pool in the Tombs Court.

MESSAGE TO IGNORE TARIFF.

President Will Not Permit It to Balk Rate Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.—Revision of the tariff will not be sought by President Roosevelt at the coming session of Congress. He let it be understood to-day that he had been forced to the conclusion that he must abandon either the demand for railroad legislation or the demand for tariff changes, and that he had decided to centre his efforts upon the former.

The President knowe that to obtain satisfactory legislation either on rates or the tariff will be a herculean task, even with all his popularity and power. To attempt to carry out both reforms, it is conceded, would he to defeat both.
